Passport to the World

THIS is the season of prizegiving ceremonies for schools of nursing. A favourite dictum, frequently and rightly stated by the august persons invited to present the hospital certificates and prizes to the successful student nurses, is "A British trained nurse has a passport to the world".

Away goes the newly trained nurse to work in the country of her dreams only to find that in reality her British State-registration certificate carries no immediate guarantee of registration or official recognition as far as employment or salary is concerned in countries other than her own. If she is qualified to nurse yet is ignorant of the statutory requirements related to practice, her professional education has been at fault, and unfortunately this is only too often the case.

Even within the United Kingdom the nurse registered by the General Nursing Council for England and Wales is not automatically registered and thus entitled to practise in Scotland or Northern Ireland; only in April this year was agreement reached by the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council that a nurse registered in England and Wales and working in Scotland but not registered there should be entitled to the same salary and conditions of service as if she were employed in England and Wales, and vice versa (see Nursing Times, April 19, page 432). The nurse registered in England and Wales can apply for and obtain reciprocal registration by the statutory body for Scotland or Northern Ireland and become registered on payment of the required fee. But if she seeks to travel to other countries she may well find that she is not entitled to registration as a nurse for purposes of employment without taking further examinations or even further periods of training.

The reasons for this are usually due to lack of experience in obstetrical nursing, sick children's nursing or the diet kitchen—all of which may be required for the basic nursing qualification in other countries; or because the number of class hours of instruction in such subjects as bacteriology, materia medica or anaesthesia may also be considered inadequate for registration elsewhere. At least one province in Canada may question the eligibility for registration as a nurse on grounds of an inadequate standard of general education.

This does not mean that the British trained nurse has not a qualification of the greatest value in whichever part of the world she may wish to continue her service. But it does mean that she should realize that the majority of countries have protected the title of 'nurse', and protected the patients, by laying down minimum requirements for practising nurses. Before she sets out on her travels she must, for her own security and satisfaction, and for the good reputation of British nurses, find out the particulars with regard to registration and apply for registration forms before leaving this country. The importance of this is emphasized by a letter in our correspondence columns this week criticising British nurses who arrive in South Africa without having made application for registration there, and expect immediate welcome and employment.

This may all sound very difficult. But, where there are difficulties the nursing profession throughout the world has created the means to overcome them in the happiest possible way—that is by the personal assistance made available to every nurse through her national nursing association. Are you a member of yours—the National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland? Do you know the answer? If not, why not?

The National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland is a federation of some 70 nurses' associations or hospital leagues, the largest association being the Royal College of Nursing. If you are a member of any one of these you are a member of the National Council and can claim assistance from them; they will put you in touch with the national nursing association of the country to which you are going or, if required, help you to obtain suitable employment. If you are not a member, see that you become one forthwith—not only for your own benefit but in recognition of the value of this work in the interests of the profession throughout the world.

Another valuable asset in being a member of your national nursing association is that it entitles you to take part in international nursing events, such as the important international congresses organized every four years by the International Council of Nurses. It was embarrassing to find that some British nurses, hearing last year of the congress in Rome which has just concluded, and wishing to attend, had no idea that they had no right to do so if they were not in membership with their national nursing association. They have time now in which to join and so be eligible to attend the 12th quadrennial congress in Australia in 1961.

Nurses who wish to keep themselves in touch with their profession nationally can do so directly by obtaining the quarterly News Letter of the National Council from Miss Rowe, S.R.N., S.C.M., executive secretary, 17, Portland Place, London, W.1 (price 6d. or 2s. 6d. annual subscription), who will also supply a list of the organizations in membership on receipt of a stamped addressed envelope. For news of the profession throughout the world all nurses should be familiar with the International Nursing Review which is obtainable from the headquarters of the International Council of Nurses, 1, Dean Trench Street, Westminster, price 15s. annually.

In the leading article in the May issue of the Review, Miss D. C. Bridges, C.B.E., R.R.C., S.R.N., executive secretary, International Council of Nurses, writes on the importance of nurses' professional associations. "We like to speak", she writes, "of a nursing profession, but without organization there can be no profession. We are just individual nurses, or a collection of individuals, each going our own way. We may each have the best intentions and the highest motives, but it requires our unified efforts if the intentions and motives are to be translated into effective action". Finally she writes "We can show the world how nurses have learned to co-operate and to help each other, and in so doing we can make a contribution to the cause of world peace."

Topical Notes

Occupational Health Congress, Helsinki

TWENTY-FOUR occupational health nurses from Great Britain will take part in the 12th International Congress on Occupational Health opening in Helsinki on July 1. The Occupational Health Section, Royal College of Nursing, will be represented by Mrs. I. G. Doherty, deputy secretary of the College, who was for five years secretary to the Section. Three nurses from this country are reading papers at the Congress: Miss M. Blakeley, principal nursing officer, Unilever Ltd.; Miss H. M. Simpson, occupational health nursing tutor, Royal College of Nursing; Mrs. M. M. Williams (née Durrant), senior nursing sister, Ministry of Supply. The Journal for Industrial Nurses will be represented by its editor, Miss Marion M. West, who will also report Congress events for the Nursing Times. Several firms are helping their nurses with expenses but the majority will be paying their own, some with the help of a number of small bursaries awarded from the Occupational Health Section's scholarship and bursary fund, which is made up of donations given annually by the managements of firms interested in the professional growth of their nursing staff. Meetings of the Permanent International Commission on Industrial Medicine will also take place during the week of the Congress (which is held every three years) and it is hoped that nurses already nominated by several countries, including Great Britain, will be elected to membership of the Commission.

Protection against Radiation—

A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL on the protection of staff engaged in radiological work is now available to hospitals in the National Health Service. The *Code of Practice for the Protection of Persons exposed to Ionizing Radiation has been prepared by the Radioactive Substances Advisory Committee, the scientific body, with Sir Charles Darwin as chairman, set up under the Radioactive Substances Act 1948 to advise Ministers, including the Minister of Health, on general problems of protection arising out of the use of ionizing radiations. The Code is primarily concerned with technical data relating to the necessary safeguards to ensure that adequate protection is afforded to those using X-ray and other radiological apparatus (such as cobalt units) as well as radioactive isotopes. It should not be confused with advice that may result from the inquiry now proceeding of a committee under Lord Adrian into hazards to patients, etc. The new Code has been designed, as far as possible, as a set of purely technical rules and is divided into two main sections. The first part contains the protection rules applicable to the use of X-rays for diagnostic purposes and to the use of X-rays and gamma-ray beam units for therapeutic purposes. The second part contains protection rules applicable to the diagnostic or therapeutic uses of radioactive isotopes either sealed or unsealed. It also contains in a supplement the relevant fundamental medical and scientific information for the guidance of those concerned and technical details concerning the design of radiological and radiotherapy departments. Definitions of the terms used are set out in an appendix to the supplement. The greater part of the material in the Code is internationally published and generally accepted by all who work with X-rays and radioactive substances. It is a useful work of reference, and unique in that it represents a detailed working manual taking into account as much of the latest published material as possible, including the recommendations of the Medical Research Council's report on the Hazards to Man of Nuclear and Allied Radiations. It is thought that it will do much to improve safety arrangements not only in hospitals but also in other places where ionizing radiations are used.

—Minister's Request

IN SENDING COPIES of the Code to all hospital authorities, the Minister of Health, Mr. Vosper, has asked them to arrange for practices in their radiological and radiotherapy departments to be reviewed so that any necessary measures may be taken to bring safety precautions up to the minima laid down. He feels that the basic rules—signified by the word 'must'—would be accepted as minima by radiologists and radiotherapists. The Minister also trusts that those in charge of all radiological and radiotherapy departments will take the necessary steps to ensure a strict observance of the minimum safety requirements advised in the Code. He emphasizes that there is no desire to interfere with the clinical freedom of the individual consultant, but in the special circumstances of those departments in which ionizing radiations are used, it has become essential to secure a definite minimum standard of safety precautions and to place upon the head of the department the responsibility for seeing that it is maintained.

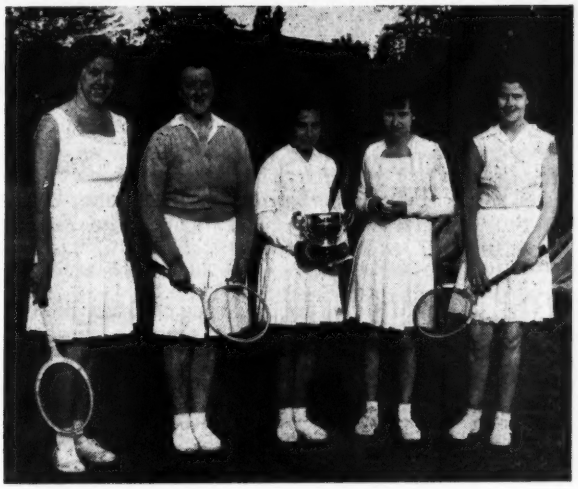
Tennis Tournament, Chatham

THE SILVER ROSE BOWL was won by Miss B. B. Williamson, Chatham, in the Inter-hospitals Q.A.R.N.N.S. Tennis Tournament held at the Royal Naval Hospital, Chatham, on Friday, June 21. Dame Doris Beale was the guest of honour. Two nurses from each of the three Royal Naval Hospitals, Chatham, Haslar and Plymouth, competed. Miss Williamson won all her five matches in 10 sets and 76 games. She beat Miss D. A. Story, Plymouth, 6—2, 6—0; Miss C. M. Melliss, Plymouth, 6—2, 8—6; Miss V. Shorten, Chatham, 2—6, 6—4, 6—4; Miss S. M. Hayes, Haslar, 11—13, 7—5, 6—4; Miss F. Whittaker, Haslar, 6—3, 6—1. Miss Williamson returned recently to Chatham from Malta. Her chief opponent, Miss S. M. Hayes, who was runner-up, leaves shortly for Malta for two years. The silver rose bowl, the trophy of the tournament, was given in 1949 by Miss O. H. Franklin, then matron-in-chief, Q.A.R.N.N.S. Each hospital has now won the bowl three times.



Miss B. B. Williamson (Chatham) who won the rose bowl in the Inter-hospitals Q.A.R.N.N.S. Tennis Tournament, with Miss S. M. Hayes (Haslar), runner-up, centre right, and other competitors.

Ranyard Centenary Thanksgiving—

MANY RANYARD NURSES in uniform, with members of the Council and others interested in domiciliary nursing, including representatives of the Queen's Institute of District Nursing, filled the Church of St. Martin-in-the Fields on the afternoon of June 19 for the Centenary Thanksgiving Service. The officiating clergy were the Bishops of Gibraltar and of Croydon, both former chaplains to the Ranyard Mission, with the Rev. H. Wallace Bird, vicar of St. Mark's Church, Kennington Oval. A centenary birthday gift of over £900, dedicated by the Bishop of Gibraltar, the Rt. Rev. F. W. T. Craske, who also gave the address, was presented by 24 Ranyard sisters and four Ranyard male staff in the form of a token offering from each of the South London districts served in four of the divisions of the London County Council. A great-niece and a great-great-niece of Mrs. Ellen Ranyard, who founded the Ranyard Mission in 1857 in the then squalid area round the Seven Dials (where the Cambridge Theatre now stands), heard the Bishop of Gibraltar's address linking Mrs. Ranyard's work—"so full of grace and power"—with that of her great contemporaries, Elizabeth Fry, Josephine Butler, Florence Nightingale, Hilda Martindale and others. London owed a great debt to the Mission over the past 100 years for its work of healing, prayer and teaching which had always been accomplished through training for a ministry to both soul and body. Ability to adapt to constant social change which had included the impact of two world wars—and to convert mistakes into opportunities for greater service—these qualities had given rise to the success for which thanksgiving was now being offered.

—A New Opportunity

THE HEADQUARTERS of the Ranyard Mission, whose 150 nurses live in their own homes in the particular district they serve, are at present in an old house in Kennington Road which is inadequate for the purpose. Plans connected with the restoration of the bomb-damaged church of St. Mark, Kennington Oval, now offer a wonderful opportunity to provide all the accommodation which the Mission needs by reconstructing the upper part of the church and using the space previously taken up by the galleries, with a separate entrance from the outside. These plans include a lecture hall to seat 200, rooms for stores and equipment, with a chapel and office space. Other events connected with the centenary include a garden party on July 10 at Lambeth Palace at which the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Fisher will be present.

Central Health Services Council

THE CENTRAL HEALTH SERVICES COUNCIL, meeting on June 18, elected Lord Cohen of Birkenhead, former vice-chairman, as chairman in succession to Sir Frederick Messer, who has been chairman since the Council was first constituted at the start of the National Health Service, but who did not stand for re-election. Sir Cecil Oakes was elected vice-chairman. Lord Cohen of Birkenhead is professor of Medicine at the University of Liverpool and chairman of the Standing Medical Advisory Committee. He has played a leading part in the work of the Central Health Services Council since its inception, and has been chairman of a number of its committees. Sir Cecil Oakes was formerly clerk of the East Suffolk County Council, and is now an alderman of that Council. He is vice-chairman of the Standing Mental Health Advisory Committee, and was a member of the Royal Commission on the law relating to mental illness and mental deficiency.

WHETHER we are producing chickens, flowers, vegetables, or nurses, we must be constantly concerned with improving methods of production. Improvement depends to a very great extent upon the ability and freedom to discard conditions which have been found to be non-crucial, uneconomical, and non-productive.

The curriculum in a school of nursing is, of course, the agent which applies the conditions which have been found to be most crucial or decisive in the education of a nurse. What are these conditions which we apply today in nursing education? Are those conditions crucial in developing the kind of nurses we want and need? We are quite concerned with such curricular matters as the number of hours allotted to courses, the number of days of experience in the various clinical areas, course content, course placement, and the pattern of clinical rotations. I do not say that these factors are not crucial—my question is, are we overlooking other factors that are, perhaps, more crucial?

Today's Nurse, a Displaced Person

The professional nurse of today is a displaced person. She is in the unenviable position of being tied by emotion, tradition and education to a way of functioning that—for good or bad, and for reasons largely beyond the control of nurses—no longer exists. For the most part, though of course there are exceptions, we teach students to handle, enjoy, and find satisfaction in kerosene lamps and then send them out to cope with electric lights.

When we talk about the 'bedside nurse' or when we extol the virtues and values of bedside nursing, we are consciously or unconsciously thinking about the kind of nursing care that we gave to patients with pneumonia before the discovery of the miracle drugs, or to post-operative patients before the days of early ambulation. For these patients, nursing care involved much contact between the nurse and the patient. The patient's comfort and, in many instances, his recovery seemed to be dependent on the nurse and the care she gave. The nurse was told she was important and she felt important. Today the nurse is told that she is important but there seems to be some question as to whether she feels important. There is a difference between feeling necessary and feeling important—although perhaps it is a very subtle difference.

Formerly, when nurses communicated with their patients through physical contact, the patient gained, in many instances, a feeling of warmth and security and the nurse gained a feeling of satisfaction, for she felt, and rightly so, that she was giving of herself. Even though we may have made many mistakes in verbal communication, even though we unconsciously fostered dependence, we were able many times to convey a sense of 'caring' to the patient so that he felt 'cared' for. We were able to achieve a relationship through ministering to his physical needs; this relationship had almost a kind of spiritual quality in that it expressed a kind of love, or at least a longing to love.

Now we can't go back to that exact kind of nursing, even if we want to. We have changed and the situation has changed. In a way, we face the same problem that confronts any mother. This problem is to find ways of expressing care, love, or concern, when the child—or in our case, the patient—becomes less dependent on us, physically and emotionally. On the one hand we encourage patients to be independent because we believe this is good. On the other, we don't know how to be comfortable in a situation in which they are our partners in their care, perhaps because our experiences have been more often in a subordinate or a supervisory role than in an equal role. Because of our inevitable and natural awkwardness in learning different ways of relating to patients and to co-workers, we are understandably nostalgic about the past; this nostalgia is reflected in many of our current educational practices and in our hopes for, and criticisms of, nursing.

Nursing care is tremendously different today and it will undoubtedly continue to change. We would not have it otherwise; but because of these changes, we are displaced. The professional nurse now is in the position of working with things, not with people—except perhaps in a superficial way. We work with pills, injections, hot packs, charts, and suction machines. We are the conveyors and manipulators of things, which act as a sort of middleman between us and the patient. Our impact is no longer as direct as it was, or at least it is not as easy to see.

There are many reasons why some of us left bedside nursing to teach nursing. One may have been our inability to find a satisfying relationship with patients in view of their increasing dependence on things and their decreasing dependence on us personally. If this is true for some of us, we did not solve our problem by going into teaching; instead we side-stepped it, for successful learning on the part of the student means that she too becomes more independent, and less in need of us.

Two Most Crucial Conditions

How can a student learn that the tools and procedures of nursing—important and necessary though they are—are means and not ends? How can she learn that the relationship between the nurse and the patient is just as important as it ever was—indeed more important than we knew—and that this relationship has a great and demonstrable influence on everything she does for him? Patients need the nurse's warmth and 'caring'. How can a student learn to express this caring quality—which most students have to some degree when they enter a nursing school—in the nursing situation as it exists today?

The methods of conveying love or caring are infinite and cannot be reduced to a few rules, magic formulas, or procedures. They cannot be taught by adding to the curriculum classes in communications or human relations. A student needs help in finding her own individual way of showing patients that she cares sincerely about them, regardless of how brief her contacts with them may be or whatever their purpose. Two of the most crucial conditions that need to be provided in nursing education today are for each student to have an opportunity to (a) develop the feeling that she herself is respected, appreciated, and cared for as an individual and (b) the opportunity to learn to become a nurse.

I believe that the how of nursing education is most important for us to consider at the moment—not because I believe the what is unimportant or unnecessary but because, to me, the how has sometimes been neglected in our struggle with the what.

Let us consider first why it is important that the student be given an opportunity to develop the feeling that she is respected, appreciated, and cared for as an individual. This precept, of course, is not restricted to nursing education. In its broadest sense, its implications are the basis for all successful human relations. But if nurses are to come out of their displacement, they must learn how to respect, appreciate, and care for as many of their patients and co-workers as possible. And these abilities not only can be learned, they have to be learned, since they are not inborn.

It also is quite true that students enter a school of nursing, not as formless lumps of clay to be moulded, but with definite ways of thinking about, feeling, and acting toward people and themselves. Learning that already has taken place will condition the learning that takes place in the school of nursing. We can do nothing about the student's past experience. All we can do is to provide experiences which will help her to have increasing respect for herself and for others. The student will be better able to respect, appreciate, and care for her patients and co-workers if she is respected, appreciated, and cared for by the people who are responsible for her education—not just as a provider of nursing service, not just as another scalp to add to the school's reputation but as a unique individual who, for her own reasons and in her own ways, wants help in her efforts to become a nurse.

Students are Unique Individuals

All of us, including the students, need to become more aware of the ways in which we differ as individuals, not as an aid to becoming more alike, but as an aid to developing our uniqueness, a uniqueness that is grounded in, and functions in, social interaction. The student needs to feel that her growth is important and is of concern to us, that the facts and techniques of nursing are means and not the ends. We sometimes teach as though the course content is the end and the student the means to that end. It is small wonder, then, that the student in working with patients considers the tools of nursing as ends and the patients as means.

There are many ways of letting the student know that she is respected, appreciated, and cared for as she is now. First, we have to explore and perhaps change our own attitudes toward students, toward our jobs as teachers, toward nursing, and toward the learning process in general. We need to re-evaluate a rather prevalent belief that changes in feelings, attitudes, and values come through more and better academic information.

In some ways, we have become advocates of the infallibility of logic, disciples of the 'tell them, sell them, explain it to them' school of thought, and our students go out and do likewise with patients. We need to find ways of helping students to become more aware of the attitudes and values they already have and to help them build on these or change them through their own experiences—rather than through our experiences. It is not enough to cover the material outlined for the course; we need to provide opportunity for a depth of learning, opportunity and time for the student to learn some things on her own, and outside of class. When students are expected to cope with large doses of facts and knowledge, they don't really learn; they merely become storehouses for this knowledge for varying degrees of time. Usually the emptying of the storehouse occurs shortly after the examination has been taken. A course ought to leave the student with the urge to know more, not with the feeling that now she has 'had it'.

I have often thought that one very good criterion of the effectiveness of a course would be to ask the student to list the questions she had after the course was finished. We usually ask for answers, but perhaps questions would be a better indication of learning.

Student-faculty relationships are important. The student should feel that she is respected, appreciated, and cared for by her instructors. Though there are many ways of conveying these feelings to the student, and though there are no rules of procedure, except in a very superficial sense, instructors can convey them, each in her own way, with relatively little or no trouble.

Personal Experiences Influence Nursing Care

Two other areas in nursing education which are important in helping the student to gain a feeling that she is respected, appreciated, and cared for are the residence and the health clinic. Our students, for the most part, are still adolescents, still struggling with their own perhaps unrecognized dependency-independency needs. Many of them frankly admit that one of their reasons for entering a school of nursing is to get away from home and from restrictions which they feel are unfair.

A student frequently is inconsistent in her behaviour. She vacillates between being a child and being an adult. The persons in charge of the residence need to be aware of this ambivalence and, even more, they must be prepared to act as wise, understanding and loving parents if the student is to grow up healthily in her chosen environment of sickness and death. It is this environment which makes it even more important for the student in nursing to have support than for the student in a college dormitory.

In the health clinic, students learn many attitudes—not all of them positive—about health and illness, as they report their own illnesses and receive treatment. A health clinic, that is staffed with personnel who have the time and the qualifications to understand and help these adolescent students with their problems of dysmenorrhea, headache, backache, insomnia, general malaise, colds, and stomach upsets, not only contributes to the mental health of a segment of society but also to the improvement of nursing service. The kind of understanding and help that is given to the student in the health clinic (and in the residence) may be more significantly related to the kind of nursing care she wants to give, and is able to give, than the content of some of our nursing courses. If this is true, the need for full-time qualified personnel in the residence and in the health clinic is as great as the need for specialists in chemistry, or in surgery.

Students' Rights

The crucial condition—that the student should have the opportunity and the freedom to learn to become a nurse—may prompt you to say that we do have this in nursing education for we have an actual situation, a real life situation, in which our students can practise. We do indeed have an actual situation, but its very actuality has deprived our students of one of their natural rights as students—the right to have an opportunity and the freedom to learn to become a nurse.

For the most part, from her earliest days on patient units, a student is not becoming a nurse—she is being a nurse. To be sure, she wears a student uniform and is safeguarded to a certain extent by the presence of instructors and supervisors. But because she gives care—or at least carries out procedures for the patient—much more is expected of her, and indeed she expects much more of herself than is true of other learners at a similar point in their educational programmes. Perhaps it is significant that we call this young person a student nurse, not a nursing student or student in nursing. At any rate, most of the people who are in contact with the student, think of her as a nurse—a nurse who doesn't know very much yet and one who is quite slow, but still a nurse.

Just as the child is not a miniature adult, the student is not and should not be considered as an inexperienced nurse. The student, because she is being a nurse instead of learning to become one, is bound to feel inadequate, and, more important perhaps, to feel impatient with the learning process.

Are Students 'Putting in Time'?

It is true, of course, that conditions have improved tremendously in regard to the clinical experience that is a part of the nursing curriculum. We have clinical instructors, ward classes, patient-centred teaching. The student's work week has been decreased to conform with current labour practices and, in some instances, to provide more time for study and recreation. Two of the factors that are involved in our present pattern of nursing education are these: the student provides a necessary nursing service, and the widespread belief that all of this practice (or as I have put it, all of this being a nurse) for two and one-half years or so is of tremendous educational value.

Our curriculum pattern has remained essentially the same for many years. Most of us are quite aware that senior students in most programmes, and sometimes even junior students, feel that they are just 'putting in time'. But instead of trying to find new, perhaps more educationally sound curricular patterns, we spend much time and energy in trying to enrich the present pattern or add to it. Part of the difficulty—and this is understandable—is that the nurse faculty of a school of nursing is rather uncertain as to just where their main concern should lie—with the student or with the patient. I can think of no other profession in which the faculty is put in such a difficult position—a position of having to choose between educationally sound principles of learning and the necessity of providing student service to provide care for patients. In spite of all our efforts to make this service more educational, the situation remains somewhat paradoxical.

It is true that we learn by doing, but doing can lead to either desirable or undesirable outcomes depending upon the conditions which are present in the practice situation. To have a truly professional education, students need many opportunities to analyse nursing situations if they are to identify values and principles, and enough practice to develop artistry in devising means to deal with these situations. Learning the manual procedures actually takes much less time than we used to think possible. Students do not need to practise these skills over and over again. These skills might be called the non-professional part of nursing even though they are, of course, one of the professional nurse's tools.

The professional part of nursing consists of being aware and understanding what the patient wants and needs from the nurse and being able consciously to use oneself to meet them. Providing this kind of care is, of course, always limited by the amount of awareness and understanding the nurse has of her own feelings, wants, and needs, and by the prescribed role the nurse plays in the medical team.

The professional part of nursing involves more than ust carrying out the doctor's orders; some of the patient's most urgent needs, physiological and emotional, may not appear on the order sheet or on the visible index file. Finding out what these needs and wants are, regardless of how simple or complicated they may be, and helping to provide them, are essentially nursing functions and can only be accomplished if nurses have an opportunity to learn how to function in this way.

If we wish our students to learn professional nursing, we must radically change our present ideas about clinical experience. The 'doing' that the student needs is to practise thinking, observing, studying, analysing, reading, comparing, experimenting. This is the 'doing' that appears to have been neglected in our present emphasis on 'doing up' patients. I do not know how much time a student needs to spend with patients to learn to become a professional nurse. We already have enough magic numbers in the way of definite requirements of hours, days, and months for courses and clinical services, and I should hesitate to suggest any new magic numbers or formulae. A school's curriculum can only provide a foundation, a base for becoming, and I suspect that much of the professional being occurs after graduation.

Many nurses sincerely believe that if the clinical field is used only as a laboratory—a place for the student to observe and to practise selected and pertinent skills, manual, interpersonal and managerial—she will lose or at least not gain what is called the 'spirit' of nursing. My own experiences with students have led me to question this belief. Most students enter nursing because they have a longing to help people. Their ideas, however, as to what helping people really means are vague and sometimes unrealistic. This longing, to me, is the spirit of nursing, and most of our students have it.

The job of the school of nursing is to help the student make this spirit realistic, meaningful, artistic, and useful. Some practice is certainly necessary, but I question our current ratio of practice and theory and I wonder if the spirit is not lost or at least weakened because of the pressures we put upon the student in the actual situation and because of the necessity of her being instead of becoming. I also wonder if we are not expecting the student to assume the responsibilities of a job-holder rather than the responsibilities of a learning student. If this is true, it would almost seem inevitable that students develop negative attitudes toward both the job of nursing and the learning of nursing.

Not Enough Now—Never Too Many

To apply these two crucial conditions, there are at least two essential requirements—qualified personnel and freedom for the student to become a nurse, freedom from the pressures and demands of nursing service; in other words an entirely different use of clinical resources. Providing the two crucial conditions presented here is neither simple nor easy. But if we are convinced that they really are crucial, we will find ways of providing them. We will find the means, both in our schools of nursing and in the situations where nurses function, that will enable the presently displaced nurse to work with creativity and satisfaction.

There are other people who can perform many of the tasks that professional nurses perform. But there never will be too many people who can convey to the patient a sense of caring and a feeling of warmth and convey these in a conscious way, knowing what they are doing and for what purpose they do it.

Nursing Emotionally Disturbed Patients

VII. STAFF/PATIENT ACTIVITIES IN THE MEDICAL UNITS

THIS is a description of the structure and tasks of the four medical units into which the hospital is divided. The architectural design makes it impossible to divide the hospital into four areas of equal size, and consequently there is a variation in the number of beds and also in the tasks of each unit.

Each medical unit comprises a group of patients, a porter, a cleaner, a senior sister, trainee nurses and two or three doctors, all under the supervision of a full or part-time consultant and responsible for a certain area of the hospital. Each unit formulates its own policy for administration, selection, admission and treatment of patients, and for the meetings and discussions it will hold. There is an over-all expectation that patients will take part in the daily work of the unit.

Patients are responsible for making their beds, the general care and cleanliness of their rooms, and for assisting the porter and cleaner in the daily cleaning of the various public rooms and corridors in their unit areas, between the hours of 9 a.m. and 12 noon. Each unit patient-group holds a weekly works meeting conducted by a patient chairman, or 'works manager', and attended by all the patients (except those working outside the hospital) and by the nursing staff and cleaner. Work is allocated to new patients by the works manager, or re-allocated to other patients, just as the patient housing representative allocates beds and rooms to new patients, with help or advice from the staff when the need arises. There is an opportunity for problems to be discussed and complaints to be ventilated.

The matron is supplies officer for all non-fixed equipment and materials for internal decoration. She allocates an annual sum of money to each unit so that it can arrange its own interior decoration, replacements of linen, furniture and other equipment as required within this budget. Opportunities are given for patients to express their ideas about all these things and to take part in choosing patterns, colours and materials and so on. Patients then appreciate the problems of the cost of the services they are using.

Servery Service by Patients

Certain services may be provided by a unit for the total community—one provides the dining-room and servery service, completely undertaken by patients, and another a combined staff and patient kitchen service.

The servery and dining-room service has undergone four changes since it was provided solely by staff two years ago. As an experiment we asked patients to help at peak hours during times of staff sickness and holidays, and this seemed quite successful. Then as staff members left they were not replaced, but patients went to help during each shift of duty. This latter arrangement was not liked by the staff, who felt their jobs to be in jeopardy; also they felt strongly that they could not work with patients who failed to appear regularly for work, selected the jobs they wanted to do, were untidy and dirty by staff standards, disappeared when they got bored, and left the brunt of the work to a reduced staff. They felt frustrated that they were no longer able to maintain their former high standard of cleanliness and efficiency. Patients complained of the staff attitude and were equally unhappy in the situation. Nursing staff members tried in vain to link the two sections but without success.

Eventually the patients of one unit were given complete responsibility for providing servery service for all patients, and the staff were transferred to a smaller servery to cater for all staff. The latter group settled down happily in their new surroundings, but the patients' problems increased with their increased responsibilities. They had to arrange shift rotas, cope with their members who failed to return dirty dishes from their rooms, and also those who filched food (some patients have particular difficulties in this respect). After many vicissitudes some measure of satisfaction was achieved. The next thing was that a member of the medical staff of the unit providing servery service left the hospital for another post. This meant that there were fewer patients in the unit and they were no longer able to cope with the work. Appeals for help sent to other units met initially with little response. Finally the senior sister of the unit arranged a meeting at which it was agreed by the patients that each medical unit would participate in the service by undertaking responsibility for it on certain days of the week. This last arrangement, only recently begun, seems the most satisfactory to date.

Patients Work with Kitchen Staff

The kitchen service presented fewer problems, no doubt because the cooks did not feel they would be ousted by patients; the kitchen maids, though not too easy about it at first, gradually accepted patients working with them. The head cook has become increasingly more appreciative of patient help, on which she is very dependent during staff holidays, and those most interested now assist her with cake and pastry making. The patients, particularly the women, are usually rather hesitant to work in the kitchen, while the men regard it as a novelty and are by and large more popular with the staff. Work for men in the hospital is a real problem as there are relatively few tasks that a man would normally undertake. Getting work outside the hospital is not always easy, though local firms and officers of the labour exchange are most helpful.

In the medical units problems arising between staff and patients or between patients and patients are dealt with by the parties concerned meeting together to thrash out the problem. Where possible a policy is decided on and action indicated. Sometimes a recommendation has to be taken to another unit or department of the hospital and again the people affected will meet together to see what can be done. With a clear administrative structure it is fairly easy to see who should get together with whom about a particular problem. For instance, the hospital provides laundry facilities for patients, a room equipped with a washing-machine, deep sinks, drying and airing cupboards, wringer, boiler and irons. The care and cleanliness of this is the responsibility of one of the medical units. The hot water supply, on the other hand, is the concern of the principal administrative officer of the hospital. Soon after the installation of the washing machine the patients complained that the machine was useless because there was no hot water. These complaints came up at the patients' meeting in the units and were referred back to the unit responsible for providing the service. The senior sister of that unit together with patient representatives then discussed the matter with the administrative officer. One of the patients concerned happened to know quite a lot about hot water systems and his suggestions were useful.

It may seem that a lot of talk goes on in this kind of nursing, and that is so; but it is out in the open. Some kind of decision is usually reached and action initiated by mutual agreement; even if it is only to decide to do nothing for the time being, everyone knows how and why that decision was reached.

Benevolent Fund Home in Scotland

THE gift of a large and beautiful house near Pitlochry, and an endowment to assist in its maintenance, will enable the Benevolent Fund for Nurses in Scotland to open another home for elderly retired nurses. The annual report of the fund describes increased activities, including progress in the work on the annexe at Strathmore House; both there and at the new home near Pitlochry individual cooking facilities will be provided so that the retired nurses may do their own housekeeping, which many prefer. The report mentions increased support from the staffs of Scottish hospitals which included the splendid contribution of £500 from Stirling Royal Infirmary. Last year the sum of £5,578 10s. 10d. was distributed among beneficiaries, as compared with £3,860 7s. 6d. in 1955, and the committee hopes to maintain and if possible to increase this assistance to those retired nurses in need of it.

Book Reviews

Advice to the Expectant Mother

on the care of her health and that of her child (11th edition).—by F. J. Browne, M.D., D.SC., F.R.C.S.E., F.R.C.O.G., and J. C. McClure Browne, B.SC., M.B., B.S., F.R.C.S.E., F.R.C.O.G. (E. and S. Livingstone Limited, 1s.)

This is an extraordinarily good shillingsworth. It is a small paper-covered pamphlet, written by experts in straightforward English. It has not the coyness or the dear little pictures that tend to crop up in books for mothers. It assumes that people can read, that they want facts, but that they do not want a large textbook. The authors state that the book is intended "to supplement, not take the place of, personal interviews with a midwife or physician. During a consultation some points are liable to be overlooked, or advice actually given may be soon forgotten."

Advice is given on antenatal care, hygiene, common disorders of pregnancy, explanation of pregnancy and labour, including relaxation exercises, preparation for confinement, and hints on breast feeding. It includes particulars of maternity benefits under the N.H.S. but curiously misses out the delivery pack supplied by the N.H.S. (via the midwife) for confinements at home.

Naturally no two people ever agree on the minimum list of baby clothes. And I wonder how many mothers could or should test their own urine for albumen. But for your shilling you get 46 pages of admirable advice (and an index) set out in good English and clear print. It is just the kind of booklet that my patients want to read.

Simplified Nursing

(sixth edition).—by Florence Dakin, R.N., Ella M. Thompson, B.S., R.N., with the assistance of Margaret LeBaron, R.N. (J. B. Lippincott Company, Pitman Medical Publishing Co. Ltd., 36s.)

This textbook from America is one of the many written for the 'practical nurse' who is the equivalent of the assistant nurse in our own country. The introduction explains the work and status of the practical nurse, the length and scope of her training and her future prospects. Her position in relation to the professional nurse and to the doctor is carefully defined throughout the book and in the section on nursing treatments she is told exactly how far she may go before obtaining further help.

The vocational aspect of her work is emphasized and the teaching and advice on personal relationships in home nursing, and indeed throughout the book, shows understanding and wisdom. There are chapters on anatomy, physiology and hygiene and family living, including the joy of cooking, management of well and sick children and of mother and baby. Other chapters included are care of the aged and of the mentally deranged patient.

In all these sections problems are discussed from a most useful and practical point of view. The descriptions of medical diseases and surgical conditions are brief but quite adequate. The section on nursing is detailed but concise and straightforward and very practical. The book certainly lives up to its title.

Most of the illustrations are very good and clear. Some of the line drawings are very poor and could well be omitted; they spoil the style of a good book eminently suited to its purpose, except in three respects, its size (758 pages), weight and cost.

The Natural Development of the Child

A Guide for Parents, Teachers, Students and Others (fourth edition).—by Agatha H. Bowley, PH.D., F.B., PSY.S. (E. and S. Livingstone Limited, 10s. 6d.)

Dr. Agatha Bowley's book is too well known to need a great deal of introduction. Now in its fourth edition and brought well up to date, it is a book that can be highly recommended to all those concerned with the development and upbringing of children. Parents, teachers, nurses and youth leaders will all find a good deal to help them when faced with the perplexities of behaviour from early childhood to the emotional struggles of adolescent years.

The average student often refrains from taking up books on psychological subjects for fear of encountering obscure and seemingly far-fetched interpretations of behaviour and mental development. No reader of this book need have such fear. Dr. Bowley writes in a simple forthright manner. She shows "when and how difficulties occur and how they are best handled." Many lively case histories demonstrate Dr. Bowley's point, some collected in ordinary schools, some in child guidance clinics. I believe that Dr. Bowley's mention of the latter may well dispel some of the prejudice some people have for the important work of these special clinics.

To quote a paragraph of this small book will give an idea of the author's style and her philosophy of child care: "The journey from babyhood to adolescence is a long one. The route goes uphill and downhill, and by rough and smooth places, but it is an interesting one, full of adventures and challenging experiences. It is our job as parents and teachers to make the road neither too difficult nor too easy, but to try and equip the child with a healthy body, an alert mind and a courageous spirit to pursue the journey happily and successfully."

Each chapter is followed by a very adequate bibliography which should encourage interested students to further reading and more extensive study.

To acquire the book for the nurses' library may be considered a first-class investment, particularly in hospitals and health centres where work with children predominates.

STAFFING MENTAL HOSPITALS

by FREDERIC J. ELY, Mental Nursing Officer, Ministry of Health.

TWENTY-SEVEN years ago I started my training at a mental hospital in Birmingham. One of the special studies in psychiatry was, about this time, being carried out by Dr. T. C. Graves who believed that septic foci were responsible for some mental illness. Had Dr. Graves's theory proved correct to a greater degree, mental treatment might have followed a different pattern, and there might have been fewer patients in mental hospitals today.

There are those who believe that the improvement in a patient's mental condition results as much from the attention he receives as from other aspects of treatment. In the words of an old song, "it ain't what you do but the way that you do it". There was little encouragement in 1930 or nursing experiment and it could prove costly if it went wrong. A nurse of my acquaintance thought his patients might appreciate a change and without permission took two of them into a nearby field for a walk. Unfortunately for the nurse, one of his charges ran away and when the day of reckoning came the offending nurse was deprived of a salary increment for one year.

Today mental nurses will be doing things which years ago would have been considered unwarrantable risks. They endeavour to establish for their patients a life which is as near to a normal community life as possible. They are encouraged to use initiative and will not, I hope, be condemned when well-intentioned things go wrong. Perhaps the greatest difficulties impeding progress result from the ungainly old buildings in which they work.

Four Groups of Patients

Certain changes can be anticipated. Many of the patients admitted experience no more of the mental hospital than the admission ward or treatment centre and perhaps the convalescent ward. A number of the cases admitted will require a longer period in hospital and an active programme of rehabilitation so that when the conduct of these patients becomes such as will allow the community to accept them they may be returned.

Others may be regarded as the permanent inhabitants of the mental hospital and when one considers the several types of mental illness which are now less common, the outlook here seems hopeful. Finally there is the geriatric problem. The number of senile cases with mental symptoms has grown steadily. They are sometimes called psycho-geriatric cases. Day hospitals and outpatient clinics will no doubt continue to increase in number.

The four groups I have mentioned need not be treated in one large series of buildings the sites for which can only be found in remote areas. In any case large hospitals are difficult to staff. We may then find buildings provided for no more than one of the four groups of patients.

Some may be apprehensive of the outcome of such a development. They may fear that the mental hospital would become a dumping ground for the patients treated unsuccessfully. I do not share this fear nor does the history of mental nursing suggest that it is a possibility. The future status of mental hospitals with long-stay patients will depend not on how and where new buildings are sited but on the mental nurses themselves. The spirit of mental nursing has survived some very critical phases including two world wars and the service is improving, not deteriorating. Respect for mental nurses increases as our work becomes more known.

Mental Nurses of the Future

What developments might we expect in the staffing of our hospitals of the future? The standard and the results of mental nursing, the effectiveness of the unqualified workers, will depend on the quality of the qualified nurses. Only those who are suitable for training should be accepted as students. We must see that they have ample opportunity to lead a full community life. The average age of incoming male students is 20-24 and there is, especially if we take into account cadets, an increasing number of under 20's. We must not forget their educational needs.

The qualified nurse will become even more precious. If we have smaller wards this will mean more wards and more nurses. They must be used to the very best advantage and not given duties which might be performed by someone less skilled. A wider experience will be necessary if we are to avoid separating nursing into different sections of mental nursing such as chronic and acute. Some nurses will of course prefer to work in a particular section but they should be able to feel free and qualified to move if they so desire.

The Professional Outlook

We are frequently told that fewer recruits have a professional outlook—that they are more concerned with what they can earn today and that long-term incentives no longer appeal. The future leaders of our nursing teams will not be found among those who have such an attitude. For people who have no desire to train as nurses there are many duties within their competence and we must continue to employ them. In the patients' interest some degree of training or instruction is desirable.

Is there a community law or recognized principle that all workers should have a working week of fewer than 48 hours? My nurse friends believe that until the working week is reduced we cannot hope to compete with industry. It is not for me to say what the nurses' conditions and hours should be; I do however suggest that no one can effectively carry out the modern conception of mental nursing for such long daily periods as are sometimes attempted today.

A Sense of Participation

Finally I want to mention a factor which is probably the most important item of all. I refer to the atmosphere of the hospital and the spirit of those who work in it. Whenever I learn of any new development or progress in a hospital I try to get along to see for myself. In all successful developments the most striking features are the sense of participation by the nurses, and the work interest

I feel convinced that the development of mental nursing requires that we look again at some of the proposals and recommendations which we have previously rejected. The future of mental nursing is in our own hands; let us make the most of our opportunities now.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

From the Nursing Times, July 1907

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.—"I was surprised to see only a short paragraph on mental nursing in a report of 12½ columns on the International Nursing Conference in Paris. Is it possible that there is not one woman in any of our large asylums interested enough in her own work, or competent enough, to represent mental nurses at such a conference, or is it that the care of the insane is of so little importance? Some of our cleverest medical men are nerve and mental specialists yet the nurses who care for their patients have no place in the nursing world. It seems to me that the time has come when mental nurses should assert their rights, band themselves together as other hospital trained nurses have, then they would be able to send women to represent them at any conference connected with the nursing profession."

MODERN ANTENATAL CLINIC
at Edgware General Hospital

THE official opening of a delightfully planned clinic building at Edgware General Hospital, which had been brought into use for antenatal patients on May 1, was performed on June 13 by Sir Charles Read, president of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, in the presence of invited guests and members of the hospital medical and nursing staff.

After the formal handing over of the new building to the chairman of the Hendon Group Hospital Management Committee, Mrs. D. Farrer-Brown, who presided, by Lord Cottesloe, chairman of the North West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board, Sir Charles spoke of his pleasure in sharing such an important occasion. He said the clinic typified the changing face of obstetrical practice, in which early care and treatment together with a study of the psychology of antenatal patients "is educating them out of the ignorances so many have suffered and allaying their fears". The work done in such a unit was as effective in saving life—if not so spectacular—as that of an operating theatre and with over 630 deliveries in a year the quality as well as the quantity of that work was well served by its team of obstetricians and nursing staff led by Mr. E. ap I. Rosser, M.R.C.O.G.

After the Rev. J. J. Moore, the chaplain to the hospital, had offered a prayer of dedication, Alderman H. R. Neate, vice-chairman, North West Regional Hospital Board, in proposing a vote of thanks to Sir Charles also paid tribute to the hospital staff and to Miss J. S. Baughan, matron. He was supported by the medical director, Dr. J. N. Deacon, who will shortly be retiring from that office.

The guests, who included the Mayor and Mayoress of Hendon, Councillor and Mrs. Stewart E. Arridge, and the Mayor and Mayoress of Harrow, Alderman and Mrs. Harold Grainger, then visited the new buildings where members of the staff, including pupil midwives, pointed out the various special features of the equipment. These include an examination couch adapted to Mr. Rosser's design, with a sliding panel to enable the position of the patient to be changed without effort and an electric attachment to supply current for a hand torch. Numerous consulting-rooms with two dressing cubicles each, ample space for interviewing patients and history taking, a treatment room, sterilizing room, conference room for medical staff and sister's office—all open from a wide corridor leading from the patients' waiting-room, where there are small tables with chairs grouped round them to encourage a friendly atmosphere, and a refreshment bar. Soft blue and greys predominate in the wall decorations; pleasant lawns with shrubs and flower beds are seen through wide windows.

A separate exit from the waiting-room leads to the almoner's office, a large cloakroom for the nursing and midwifery staff and a lecture room used for the instruction both of patients (in relaxation exercises and parentcraft) and pupil midwives.

Miss J. Faint, S.R.N., sister-in-charge of the clinic, and Miss L. Darker, midwifery sister tutor, were obviously proud to show visitors round and explain the working of their enviable department, which, as Dr. Deacon had said earlier, is in fact a clinic for the treatment of conditions and diseases of women which, with 50 beds at Bushey Maternity Hospital, comprises a total of 130 lying-in beds and is one of the largest maternity units in Great Britain.

REPORT ON A THREE MONTHS' STUDY TOUR

In United States of America and Canada

by A. M. D. LESLIE, Matron,
West Middlesex Hospital, Isleworth.

IT would be wrong to write any report on this tour of the United States and Canada without first paying tribute to members of the National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the American Nurses' Association and the Canadian Nurses' Association for having arranged it and devoting so much time to me.

The programme covered visits to both university and hospital schools of nursing, public health and visiting nurse services, and the headquarters of the American and Canadian Nurses' Associations. In addition, through the kindness of friends I visited several homes for old people and heard a good deal about the work of volunteers in hospitals.

Similar Nursing Problems

The talks with senior nursing officers showed me that nursing problems vary little in the United States of America and Canada from those in our country. The main problems are, how to provide a first-class nursing service throughout 24 hours a day and seven days a week without detracting from the training and education of the nurse, and how to recruit and keep an adequate nursing staff. The reasons for shortages of nurses are also the same: increased demand because of the increase in hospital care, decrease in hours of duty, increase in hours of classroom teaching, early marriage, and restlessness causing the young newly qualified nurse to travel. While we are losing many of our young nurses to Canada and the United States, the Canadian nurses are moving from the East to the West of their country, into the United States and across to Australia and New Zealand and to overseas services. In the United States where nurses work a 40-hour week and in shifts, there appears to be difficulty in covering the evening and night hours of duty with an adequate number of trained staff in spite of the fact that more money is offered for these spans of duty.

The first two weeks of my tour were spent in New York where I stayed at the Harkness Hall, in the Presbyterian Medical Centre. This Hall was built to accommodate trained staff who pay for the type of accommodation they prefer, a single bed-sitting room with bathroom, a larger apartment having bedroom and sitting-room or a yet larger apartment of two bedrooms and sitting-room. Each apartment, comfortably furnished, contains a built-in kitchenette with refrigerator, gas stove and sink unit. In the basement is a laundry with electric washing-machine (nickel-in-the-slot) and rooms for recreation and entertainment. The residents may book a lounge for parties or dances for quite a small fee. It seems a pity that we in Britain cannot set up such apartment buildings near every large hospital, as it would help our housing problem, and attract more staff.

While I enjoyed my stay in New York I realize that too much was crowded into it, and that I had too little time for each visit. An afternoon with the dynamic Mrs. MacManus of Teachers College, Columbia University, should have been followed by a period in class with some of the students and in the library, reading reports and literature on the experimental two-year training course being carried out in eight junior colleges, about which Mrs. MacManus had given me an outline. The educational system in the United States of America is so different from ours that at times it was difficult to understand the educational requirements for different courses. My impression is that the junior colleges are comparable to our grammar schools, and that this experiment would compare with the Glasgow experiment.

Mrs. MacManus is quite convinced that there need to be several grades of nurses following the pattern of medicine, viz. consultant, registrars (senior and junior), technicians. In nursing, the consultant would be the university graduate, M.SC. or B.SC., the registrar would be the registered nurse from the junior colleges, the practical nurse would correspond to the technician and the auxiliary with auxiliaries to the medical staff. Unfortunately time did not permit us to discuss this theory fully.

Student Research Projects

At the Cornell University—New York Hospital School of Nursing, the student nurses are taught and encouraged from the outset of their course to undertake research. They are given various projects to carry out, such as health of schoolchildren; housing and its effect on the public; sanitation; alcoholics. In order to make a full report on these subjects the students made visits to all types of schools, to local government offices, to police courts and, in doing so, gained a wide knowledge of local government and civic affairs generally. At the same time graduate nurses had undertaken research in various fields, such as eating and sleeping habits of a group of chronically ill patients. This emphasis on research keeps the nurses alive to the part they should play in advising on patient care, and estimating the needs of patients. They should never feel that nursing is a mechanical routine of medicine, food and toilet. Indeed, it is the aim of the school to help the development of the student into a professional nurse able to work well with others, capable of exercising judgement and impelled to make a maximum contribution 'both as a citizen and a nurse', and aware of the need for continued study and research to meet the changing health needs of society. I learned of the intramural referral service carried out by nurses in New York Hospital. This is an effort to provide for transfer of nursing information when the patient is transferred from one department to another, particularly from in-patient to outpatient and vice versa.

The students are also fortunate in having eight weeks' experience with the Visiting Nurse Service of New York.

Entrants to this school of nursing must have had a minimum of two years at a college. The degree of Bachelor of Science in Nursing is awarded by Cornell University at the completion of the three years' course provided the student has maintained a cumulative average of C for the programme.

It was unfortunate that my tour started in August as the university nursing schools were on vacation, and so I was unable to attend any lectures or watch classes in 'nursing arts'. I was particularly sorry when I visited Adelphi College in Garden City, Long Island, as the campus was empty of students. Adelphi College, which is a co-educational institution school of nursing, offers four programmes:

(1) four-year basic nursing course leading to a B.SC. degree;

(2) a pre-specialization programme for registered nurses who wish to obtain a B.SC. degree;

(3) an advanced programme in psychiatric nursing to registered nurses;

(4) instruction in sciences and communication skills to students from six state hospitals.

Beth Israel and Presbyterian Hospitals

After so much discussion on the education of nurses it was refreshing to see nurses at work with patients during visits to Beth Israel and the Presbyterian Hospitals. At Beth Israel I was taken round by one of the instructors but at the Presbyterian I was one of a party on a tour conducted by a member of the personnel office. The two hospitals provided contrasts in several ways—in age, size, and in their schools of nursing. Beth Israel Hospital, built in 1929, having only 360 beds, has a non-university school of nursing for 100 students, while the Presbyterian Hospital, founded in 1896, is part of a large modern medical centre of over 1,000 beds, has a school of nursing associated with Columbia University (founded in 1892) and has some 300 students. The nursing course in both schools is of three years' duration but only at the Presbyterian School is the student able to obtain a university degree.

Graduate nurses at the Presbyterian Hospital can attend advanced courses leading to the Master of Science degree. A further difference between the two schools is that at Beth Israel the student is paid a $10 monthly allowance after three months at the school and pays no tuition fees, whereas at the Presbyterian Hospital she pays application, tuition and university fees and has no allowance. In the three years the total classroom teaching at the Presbyterian Hospital exceeded that in the Beth Israel by 370 hours.

A visit to the New York City Health Department proved interesting for I learned that the health nurses do home nursing care as well as health teaching and are responsible for the whole family. The nurses do not specialize as do our health visitors but each deals with every aspect of health—maternity and child welfare, tuberculosis, school nursing, home nursing, etc., in her prescribed district. State aid is provided for artificial limbs, hearing aids and artificial eyes, but not for glasses or dentures.

The health nurses have heavy teaching demands made on them, as medical students in addition to student nurses go into the field with them. School teachers, 700 annually, attend the school nurse and medical officer at their duties to prepare them for their part in school health work.

A Home Care Plan

My visit to Montefiore Hospital was a little disappointing as I was hoping to see something of the Home Care Plan in action as well as hearing about it. However, the discussions and information were interesting and I felt that this plan might be developed at other hospitals both in the States and at home. Not every patient discharged from the hospital comes under the plan. The conditions are:

(1) the patient must have a home to go to with a family willing to look after him;

(2) the home must be within a reasonable distance of the hospital;

(3) the patient cannot afford a private physician;

(4) the patient must be sick enough to require attention at least once a week, but if he needs attention four or five times he must go into hospital.

The staff employed are five physicians under the director of home care, two social workers, one physiotherapist, two occupational therapists and one occupational therapist to look after profit-making therapy, and the nursing care is provided by the Visiting Nurse Association of New York. The training of the nurses at Montefiore's School of Practical Nursing includes six weeks in home care.

The Home Care Plan has reduced the average stay in hospital of patients suffering from long-standing ailments such as cancer, cardio-vascular disease, arthritis, etc., from 160 to 60 days. In the nine years the plan has been working 2,000 patients have been admitted to the plan, 1,000 of whom were readmissions. Each week there is a conference of the staff including the visiting nurses and the student practical nurses to discuss problems presented by the patients, and I was privileged to sit in on such a conference.

Before leaving New York I visited the offices of the National League for Nursing and perhaps the most interesting room there was that which housed the machines for marking State examination papers. I wondered how British nurses would like this type of paper which required ticking with a special pencil the correct answer to questions. Unfortunately, the papers are quite secret so I was unable to test myself on them. I was assured that this type of examination is more accurate in assessing a candidate's knowledge than the essay type used at home. The candidate certainly has to be neat as well as accurate to ensure that the ticks are exactly in the spaces provided. The papers are passed through electronic machines which pick out all correct answers and total them. These examination questions can be used repeatedly because apparently the questions cannot be remembered accurately by the examinees and passed on to future candidates. This certainly cuts down expenditure on examiners' fees.

Washington D.C.

After New York I spent three days in Washington, D.C., two days at the Department of Health Education and Welfare, and a morning at the National Clinical Centre at Bethesda, a suburb of Washington. This centre, completed only in 1953, provides facilities for research on major health problems. The buildings together with the national institutes are located on a 300-acre tract and are very imposing. I was particularly interested in the model ward used for the training and orientation of graduate nurses, and liked:

(1) the 'Hi lo' bed which can be lowered to normal bed level for the patient's convenience, or raised to hospital bed level for nursing care;

(2) the theatre trolley with sliding top which made for ease in returning the patient to bed, and

(3) the excellent charts on body mechanics.

The central sterile supply department controlled by the pharmacist was most impressive and contained equipment for every possible treatment or medical investigation.

My most vivid memory of Washington, however, was an evening walk from the federal buildings round the Washington Memorial, past the Reflecting Pool to the Lincoln Memorial. As I walked the sun set and the floodlights were switched on, so that when I stood on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial and turned I saw not only the Washington Memorial standing high up against the sky but also its image lying full-length in the pool. Then I stood looking up at the immense statue of Abraham Lincoln and was filled with wonder and awe at its majesty.

Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore

I do not propose to comment in detail on the other American schools of nursing which I visited but will refer only to special points of interest. At the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, there are two programmes, one of 32 months for candidates who have had two or more years of collegiate study and a second programme of 36 months for those who have had less than two years of collegiate study. Both programmes are accepted by the Johns Hopkins University for 60 hours of academic credit towards the degree of B.SC. in Nursing.

I was interested also in the committee which had been set up to review the duties of ward clerks and to recommend additional duties. The nurses have even more written work to do than our own nurses, and ward clerks are used in many hospitals to relieve the nursing staff.

At Peter Bent Brigham Hospital there is an excellent recruitment programme. An 'open house' day is held to which are invited the upper classes of high schools. From 10 a.m. to 12 noon the registration desk is manned by first-year student nurses who take down the name, address and high school of each schoolgirl. The student nurses then conduct groups of four girls through the hospital, operation rooms, laboratories and outpatients and finish in the nurses residence. Other groups are conducted round in reverse manner. A 'punch' party during which the student nurses answer questions is followed at 11.30 a.m. by a formal talk on nursing and needs given by the director of nursing in the classroom. The associate director of nursing talks on the educational programme and the president of the Student Nurses' Association talks on recreation facilities. The whole programme is repeated again in the afternoon from 2 p.m. About 200 girls come each year.

Massachusetts

At the Massachusetts General Hospital the last eight months of the three-year course is considered to be practical internship for which the student receives a stipend of $240. During this period formal classes are replaced by ward conferences dealing with advanced aspects of general nursing, instruction in senior nurse functions, the team plan, and team leadership.

At the Massachusetts Memorial Hospital I witnessed a medical student conference on home care. Medical students and nurses go out on emergency calls and then continue with home care for the patient if hospital care is not necessary. Each morning there is a conference with senior medical officers on the previous day's visits, and the students are advised on subsequent treatment.

The Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit obviously did not lack funds, for the equipment was plentiful and good, the corridors of the administrative unit were carpeted, and even the ice-making machines in every ward were made of stainless steel. In addition to touring the hospital and discussing the educational programme of the nurses I attended a conference between the physiatrist (physical medicine consultant), physio- and occupational therapists, social workers and the public health nurse, at which progress and problems of patients were discussed. The public health nurse at the hospital is responsible for referring patients on discharge to the public health or visiting nurse services when necessary. I also watched the new student nurses (all wearing smocks which made them look like antenatal patients) at practice in bed-making and was interested to see that the bottom sheet was not tucked over the foot of the mattress.

Harper Hospital, Detroit

At the Harper Hospital in Detroit I was fortunate in being allowed to attend the nursing administrative meeting where problems of staffing and sickness were discussed. Later that same day I heard a heated discussion on a proposed experiment to allow 'practical nurses' to give medications. In the evening I was invited to a branch meeting of the National Nurses' Association to hear a talk and discussion on new legislation for nurses. While touring the hospital I saw a roller which helped to roll the patient from bed or operating table to theatre trolley, a bed lift and an excellent patient hoist which was demonstrated on me as patient. In the maternity unit there was a rocker-table to aid resuscitation of ill babies.

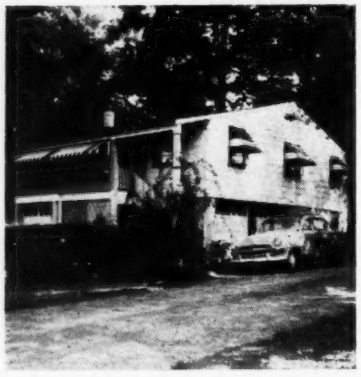
An interesting item included in the students' programme was the projects they were given, such as reports on their own communities, reports on food and meat inspection, graphs on the number of nurse days lost due to sickness, and the causes of sickness and time lost among students.

Wayne University College of Nursing

In Detroit I also visited the Wayne University College of Nursing to hear about the basic professional programme, the aim of which is "to prepare carefully selected young people to function effectively upon graduation as expert practitioners of nursing, as leaders of nursing teams in the various types of services in general and specialized hospitals, and as staff members in public health nursing services." The course includes English and English literature, physical education, nutrition and modern life, organic chemistry and biochemistry as well as the usual nursing curriculum. The students are placed for practice in hospitals according to their own needs rather than the needs of the hospital for service.

From Detroit I carry the memory of a party of the College of Nursing Faculty held in the house of one member at which I met the janitor of the College and his wife, both coloured. I was impressed that this should happen particularly at a time when there was so much worry and talk of colour bar, and in Detroit where the coloured population, I was informed, often attacked white women without provocation. The party was a very happy informal affair.

So far I have written about the visits organized for me by the American Nurses' Association but I was fortunate in other visits arranged by friends. I spent a very happy week-end in Wyncote near Philadelphia, as the guest of a registered nurse who owned a home for 32 old ladies. The old ladies looked well cared for and happy. One, aged 77, still spoke with a Glasgow accent though she had lived in the United States since she was 18 years old. On the Tuesday morning two government inspectors arrived at 9.30 a.m. without warning, and remained until about 1.30 p.m.



The apartment of Bernice Smith, R. N., owner of home for old people at Wyncote.

The inspection was most thorough.

I spent four days as guest of Miss Elisabeth Phillips, the executive secretary of the Visiting Nurse Association of Rochester, New York, who arranged a full and interesting programme. This included a visit to a Jewish home and infirmary for the aged. This home was very new, modern and well run, but I felt the old people would have been happier had they been allowed to keep some of their own belongings with them.

At the Visiting Nurse Service I observed the orientation conference for new student nurses who were to spend eight weeks in this field, and later watched them give demonstrations of how to carry out procedures in a patient's home.

Voluntary Workers

At Rochester General Hospital I learned of the work undertaken by volunteers and was surprised and impressed by the numbers and the extent of their work. In addition to running a gift shop, coffee shop and the library, they act as hostesses or receptionists in the surgical units looking after relatives of patients undergoing operations, as messengers in the clinics, and assist in the supplies and divisional therapy departments. I was given a copy of the 'handbook for volunteers' of the Rochester General Hospital and also of the Strong Memorial Hospital. Both manuals give the history of their services, explain the working of the hospital, the object and organizations of their volunteer service and the duties in each department. There is also a 'Junior Aide and Scout Programme' at the Rochester General Hospital. These juniors must be 15 years old and report for work after school and on Saturdays to deliver mail, flowers, packages, do errands and at times feed patients who are unable to feed themselves, and help with diversional therapy with children. Others cover and package goods for storing, fold, staple and stuff publications for mailing and make supplies for use in the central supply room.

On my last morning in Rochester I attended the 8 a.m. conference of the chief nursing officers at the Strong Memorial Hospital and heard the report of the night supervisor. The report included problems met with at home, failure of nurses to report for duty resulting in serious staff shortage; ants in a ward, and a man in hospital pyjamas seen wandering round the garage. As no patient seemed to be missing from any ward the director of nursing suggested it might have been a medical student as "they have a habit of borrowing hospital clothing". At 9 a.m. the director of nursing took me to a conference with the physician superintendent, the hospital secretary, engineer, pharmacist and others. I was delighted at being given this opportunity of observing the actual administrative set-up in action.

Another interesting day in the States was arranged for me in Columbus, Ohio, by a Soroptimist public health nurse, and was spent at the head office of the Columbus Public Health Nursing Service. Here I met new student nurses from collegiate schools who were beginning their eight weeks' experience. At the end of the day I listened to four new staff nurses reporting to their instructor on their first week's work and the problems they had met. These were in addition to discussions with various members of the staff on their own work and the programmes of tuition for student and graduate nurses.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF NURSES CONGRESS

Post-basic Preparation of Nurses

THE PREPARATION OF TEACHERS

by Mlle JANE MARTIN, Director, Postgraduate School of the French Red Cross, Paris.

IS our profession justified in wishing to create and organize a system of more advanced training for those who are in charge of the training of nurses? We are convinced it is, and last year at the European Conference on higher education in nursing arranged by WHO at Peebles, the 18 countries represented were unanimous on this subject.

Necessity for Training Teachers

Several reasons may be called to mind, the main ones appearing to be:

(1) The development in psychological and biological knowledge, ever-increasing discoveries in the field of medicine and their repercussions on nursing care. The latter is becoming very complex with the result that to supply the needs of and safeguard the patient, we must draw into our profession an ever-increasing number of young men and women possessing a sound education and undeniable intellectual and human qualities. The many and often attractive careers now offered to the young in every country make it necessary for us, if we wish to recruit a sufficient number of elements of value, to offer them the guarantee and the satisfaction of a wide and solid training given by teachers comparable with those they had for their secondary or even higher education, and whom they would meet if they went into other professions.

(2) The evolution in our conception of nursing care, which is such that the best basic training received is always very rapidly left far behind. Now those who teach must do so in the present and not with knowledge that is already partly out-dated.

(3) Experience shows that the knowledge of young nurses forms an extraordinary patchwork where solid and tried notions and scientific, sometimes spectacular, knowledge in a very limited field, figure beside elementary notions almost forgotten or badly understood. It is not upon learning which is so incoherent and badly assimilated that we can build the teaching of our future nurses.

(4) Lastly, we are utterly convinced that to teach with authority any art or any science, the master must know much more of it than he wishes to teach his pupils.

Of What Does it Consist?

Dr. Claparde has said: "There are two factors in education: that which is to be taught and the person to whom it must be taught."

Because it is a question here of giving an education, the aim of which is to prepare for the exercising of a profession, I will add a third factor: the profession itself.

The matter to be taught is fairly complex: it includes, of course, the scientific and technical knowledge which forms the very basis of the nursing care the tutors have to teach, and the knowledge necessary for its application, but also fairly simple and practical psychological data which will allow them to understand the reactions of the patients, of their pupils, and the atmosphere in which they are to live, whether it be the school, hospital or the community to which they belong; I will add—data sufficiently convincing for them to learn to know themselves—if they have not already reached this stage; also the philosophy of teaching as well as the principles and methods of the teaching profession which will assist them to make their role as tutors fruitful.

The second factor in education, the pupil to whom all of this must be taught, that is to say the future teacher, must retain her proper value in our eyes. We must grant her that individual knowledge which we wish to teach her to give to her future pupils. We have the responsibility not only of preparing her to teach nursing care, but also of allowing her to develop her own personality in order that her talents may be deployed to the full. We want her profession to add to her happiness, to be the fulfilment of her ambitions and not become routine for her, or a path too isolated from reality. Lastly, the third factor, the profession, must also be presented to them. We must see that the future teachers understand its present structure and the importance that their action can represent in its evolution and the attaining of its end, that is, to give to those who surround them the quantity and quality of education and attention which they have the right to expect.

The Technical Programme

The technical programme—this must fulfil several aims.

It must first of all complete the basic teaching which the future teacher has received (it is true that in France there are certain aspects of nursing care which nurses who have five or six years' professional experience have not had the opportunity of studying during their training period: for example rehabilitation, and certain public health concepts or domiciliary care).

It must bring her knowledge up to date, keep her informed of changes which have been made as a result of the evolution of medical science and modifications in economic and social conditions.

It must, in addition, enable her to acquire in a particular branch of nursing care deeper and more advanced knowledge and competence which cannot be attained during the basic training, always short and split up, or by experience alone.

This training must be offered to tutors in a logically-planned programme, giving equal emphasis to theoretical courses, clinical observation, and practical experience. Teaching must alternate with group discussions, personal work and individual research. For, and this is very important, at the same time as precise knowledge, we must see that the teachers acquire intellectual discipline, a sense of criticism and methods of work that their previous studies have not always permitted them to attain.

Only schools specially organized and equipped are capable of bringing the necessary intensity and educational management to the establishment and development of these programmes. If experience alone can give nurses a certain qualification in a defined field, it leads less rapidly and above all less surely towards the development of real efficiency and competence.

As an example and a basis for discussion, I will outline the technical programme that the professional school of the French Red Cross now proposes for its future instructresses.

I say 'now', for a few years of experiment have proved that this programme should be constantly revised and that the balance between the different parts it comprises varies very greatly with regard to pupils of the same years, and of different years.

However, the fact remains that we can never tackle this programme without instilling in those of our pupils who do not possess them already methods for personal work such as taking of notes and filling in of forms; bibliographical research, filing, drawing up of reports; that, keeping to the principles that WHO expressed during the conference on the teaching of nursing which met at Geneva in April 1952, and which we asked to be brought up at the Congress at Rio de Janeiro in 1954, we accord great value to the observation of concrete situations and their exposition, and indeed we favour this throughout the whole year; that the argument of these observations and of their exposition is made in such a way as to show the future instructresses towards which exact and wide comprehension of these situations we wish to lead them, and what, in them, is still hindering this comprehension.

The technical programme consists of a series of lectures, training periods and practical exercises.

The lectures are basic lectures on medicine, surgery, dietetics; and there are conferences on public health and health education. The teaching is based on the course of medical pathology, which gives a large part to the physiology necessary for understanding what health is and the mental disturbance brought about by illness; pathology is considered in relation to the supervision which has to be done, and the application of medical care in the broadest sense of the word and including prevention, re-education, psychological and social repercussions.

Training periods take place in the different departments of medicine, general surgery and specialized units. They offer the instructresses the possibility of bringing their knowledge up to date; they offer above all the unequalled experience of clinical observation. Thus they supply them continually with new elements for personal work.

In addition, the instructresses stay for a period in either a medical or surgical department where they come in contact with pupils preparing for the state diploma. This aspect of their training enters, to be sure, the sphere of teaching methods, but these two aspects—personal training and basic training of pupils—are so intricate that it is not out of place to speak of them here. What actually will be the task of the instructress in the face of these pupils in whose care are a specified number of patients? To guide them in their practical work, to be sure, but also to help them to understand the why and wherefore of the symptoms shown by the patients, the course taken by the illness, the supervision to be given, etc. It is obvious that, to give clear explanations, the instructress must have a real knowledge of the patients and the problems they present; she must herself put in a large amount of regular work. With her pupils she will finally be able to put the accent on the human and psychological problems.

Practical exercises cover various activities: exposition of a question prepared by an instructress and then discussed by the others, drawing up of cards for ward supervision or therapeutics; or more difficult exercises—composition on a subject studied by the group or on the observation of patients (demanding an analytical mind, to have teaching value). Let us emphasize two activities familiar to our pupils: the observation of the patient and the drawing up of a report.

Observation of the patient consists in studying all the problems which arise with a given patient: problems of liaison with the different laboratories or specialized services, with a view to establishing a diagnosis; problems of treatment with the supervision this implies, of tracking down complications, of nursing, of the education of the patient and his family, etc.

The instructress must then make an estimate of her actual knowledge, and acquire more.

The recording of her observation is, first, an excellent exercise in analysis, secondly, in synthesis. I must admit that our pupils generally excel fairly quickly in the analysis of concrete cases, even complicated ones, but they experience for a long time a certain difficulty in comparing the value of the different elements isolated by their analysis and in putting them in their exact place when presenting the synthesis of the question.

The exposition of their work is the starting point for communal discussion and criticism by the doctor who is treating the patient or the sister who assists him.

The individual problem is put back in its general setting—of pathology.

Drawing up reports is a group study; the subject is always a problem of medical attention and supervision which must be thoroughly gone into and which obliges the instructresses to carry out bibliographical research, to call on the knowledge they have acquired in hospital practice. It is there that we see the value of exchange of knowledge and of group work. It is there also that the difficulties of this group work appear and the necessity for a strict plan to give uniformity to a study in which three or four pupils are participating is shown.

The aim of these different exercises is above all to give the instructresses method for personal work, and an aptitude for individual research which they will keep wherever they carry on their profession, permitting them to keep constantly in line with the evolution of medicine and of nursing care.

Those are the different technical activities proposed for the instructresses of the professional school. But each of them arrives with different knowledge and different needs. Thus for a nurse who has worked for several years in a general medical department and who wishes to turn to the teaching of medicine, we are more ready to select specialized training periods—cardiology, nephrology, infectious diseases, dietetics, etc.—to permit her to widen her knowledge. If an instructress is to be entrusted with the teaching of medicine and tuberculosis, her time-table will include, besides obligatory lectures on medical pathology, lectures on surgical pathology concerning tuberculosis, specialized lectures given in one of the medical clinics of the Paris hospitals, as well as those given in the public health offices. One-third will, for instance, have to teach overseas and their training, study and observations will be directed towards the problems peculiar to the district where they will teach.

Thus, on their entry into the school, a plan is made for each of them and the complementary technical training aims to complete their fitness for the post they will fill on leaving the school.

Programme of Psychology

The programme of psychology is still difficult for us to define. Its aims are clear, however, the first being to interest the instructresses in observing and getting to know those who are to be their pupils. The second is to permit them to act according to the rhythm at which each works, comprehends, acquires.

What we want to do is to convince them that each mind has its own particular formation according to which it needs to be controlled and that success depends on the care that one takes to see that is it governed according to its own formation and not to another.

Social psychology, for its part, leads them to understand that group work has its own value and to favour it among their pupils, as for themselves, by making them pay particular attention to the co-ordination of their work with that of their colleagues or other members of the health or university team.

The merit of modern psychology is to be the psychology of the whole, and of the unit of the human being. Its knowledge will doubtless help the future instructresses not to grow narrow in their specialization, but to consider the importance of affectivity in all human life and to remain, in their relationship with their pupils, human beings talking to human beings.

What is more difficult is the way of developing in our pupils this psychological sense; we think that we must have recourse to lectures, but that in the limited time which is reserved for them, these lectures should be well constructed rather than numerous. We believe in the force of the first impact. And these lectures, which are not quite like the others and do not drag on throughout a year, represent something essential. They must be accompanied by selected reading and the libraries of our schools must contain many books on psychology, covering vast fields and diverse ages. These books are the basis for discussions which allow our pupils to extract several very clear and well-defined ideas from their reading.

Besides lectures and private reading, another means of developing the psychological sense of the pupils is the practice of making them ponder on definite cases, fairly complicated ones to make them aware of the necessity for having more precise, more detailed information than they usually have.

These three means of instruction being employed, we must also conduct in our schools a great campaign for the development of sensitivity and encouragement and sympathy. We must force our nurses to imagine what others think and feel, urge them to make the effort to put themselves in the place of those who will be in front of them.

This education must penetrate the atmosphere of the school which must be kept very free, very healthy, straightforward and without pettiness; in this field, example is the best teacher.

Programme of Pedagogics

The training of the instructresses implies that they should be informed of everything which concerns the school where they are going to have to practise their 'art' and of the way in which they are going to be able to practise it.

The organization and the stature of a nursing school, its administration, the programmes which they offer to the pupils, are for them throughout the whole year subjects for analysis, observation and discussion.

They must also tackle the study of the principles and techniques of modern pedagogy. We think that it is most advisable that they acquire this knowledge by means of meetings and discussions with teachers coming sometimes from other sections and that thus they may be able to consider their teaching in relation to their own section and in its exact place.

School instructresses must feel themselves 'teacher' as must a nurse, they must be able to compare their problems with those of other teachers and to follow experiments tried, for example, in new classes or in the training of teachers for secondary education.

In this field, the principal lectures must be few in number, but they must be excellent and provoke in these young teachers a personal reaction. They must understand that all that these lectures set forth is of little importance beside the individual work they must undertake and for which they alone are responsible.

The observation training periods in nursing schools are very useful; they help the future instructresses to come to an awareness of the relations between headmistress, instructresses, pupils, and of the responsibilities which fall on each one.

How much time have we to let them acquire in addition the practical experience of an actual education? That is a question which we cannot quite settle. The organization of a cycle of studies such as that proposed for the pupil-instructors of the Nursing College at Helsinki appears to be ideal and I regret we cannot adopt it; one year of training practice inserted between two semesters of theoretical and practical teaching represents an almost ideal solution.

But in France, we must, for reasons which we know besides to be transient, organize our teaching over a school year of 10 months.

In order not to overload the syllabus and to safeguard to the maximum our pupils' time for study, reflection, discussions and preparation, we have voluntarily limited the time reserved for practical teaching.

We judge it more useful to make them think over the aims and the philosophy of teaching, to verify and increase their knowledge, to arouse in them a spirit of curiosity as methodical as possible and to leave the rest to them, knowing that we are only accomplishing a part of our task. What we refuse to do is to give them 'recipes' or practical means which would create in them a false peace of mind when we know that their success depends solely on the quality of their mind, on their devotion to duty and on the love they show to their pupils and their work.

That is why, too, we rejoice when the future instructresses refuse to allow their profession to draw them into too narrow a specialization and to neglect more general culture which will permit them to keep in close touch with others.

I shall not revert to our duty to interest the instructresses in the nursing profession, they are among its most important members as they prepare the future. But I insist again on our obligation to offer the instructresses of our schools an environment, a rhythm, and working conditions, which will permit them to escape from routine, and to pursue throughout the length of their career this training of which we have just sketched the beginning. For they must add to their knowledge each day, enrich their understanding of people, share their experiences. They will have to participate in days of study, be present at lectures for improving knowledge, complete their documentation, read reviews, write articles.

It is only thus that they will always be up to their task, it is only thus that they will be happy.

PREPARATION OF NURSES FOR THEIR ADMINISTRATIVE ROLE

by H. SMET, Director, School of Nursing, and Matron, Ixelles Hospital, Brussels.

THE administration of the health services assures the patient and his family of the most qualified medical care and the services essential for their physical and mental well-being. The rapid evolution of science and techniques, the numerous specializations which are developing, the continual increase in the services which must be given to the population, create today a real problem in administration of the nursing services.

Objectives of Administration

'Administration is the organization and unification of efforts towards a common end'. It is now being proved that administration is a method which must be considered from a rational and dynamic angle, the main objectives of which are to define the aims of the institution to which it refers; to create an atmosphere favourable to the efficient collaboration of the different services and persons who assume the responsibility; to take care to reconcile the objectives pursued by the institution with the interests and dignity of those who work there; to plan in advance the programme of activities; to assure the execution of this programme, distributing the responsibilities with care according to the hierarchical scale, and co-ordinating them; to establish procedures for estimating the needs of the establishment, and evaluating the results obtained during its administration.

In most countries, when one considers a hospital establishment or a public health service, nurses are the largest part of the medical personnel. Their role is closely linked with that of the other members of the medical team with whom they collaborate and their responsibilities vary with their allotted duties. However, they are also called on to co-operate with the different people responsible for the technical and administrative services of the institution as well as with the public health officials in charge of the study and application of the health plans in the country.

They must in addition supervise and train students, auxiliary personnel and the families with whom they enter into contact. Nevertheless, their task always consists in co-ordinating and organizing the nursing care, keeping in close personal contact with the patient and his family from his entry into hospital until his return home.

Further, with the development of science in the fields of medicine and health, new responsibilities fall on the nurse: she must play her part in the forming of the health programme, participate in the organization of the health services and in research work on the improvement of the quality of nursing care; these very complex tasks imply on her part basically a solid professional formation, but also qualities of self-criticism, an intellectual attitude directed towards the systematic investigation and methodical observation of the facts, a more specialized training in social and psychological sciences as well as in methods of administration and research.

We can therefore conclude that nowadays all nurses are called upon to carry out certain administrative tasks and to fulfil supervisory functions. It is essential therefore to start the administrative training from the very beginning and to prepare the student nurses progressively for their future task by developing in them a spirit of intellectual curiosity which will permit them to adapt themselves to situations in a state of perpetual evolution.

During this first stage, the training should be based on general principles having reference to the definition of the objectives of the administration; the general structure of the organization of the different services of the institution (medical and technical); administration; annexes; the practical administration of a ward by the nurse responsible and the problem of human relations in this respect towards the patient and his family, towards the doctor, towards the personnel directing the establishment and the department, towards the nursing staff, auxiliaries, students, subordinate staff whom she controls, towards the personnel of the services with which she is called on to co-operate as a ward sister.

These notions could be materialized and applied during a period of instruction in a ward where the probationer would assume the responsibility during a fixed period, guided and supervised by instructors.

In Belgium, certain nursing schools have begun experiments in this direction; they take place during the third year of study.

Higher Supervisory Roles

We will consider now the second stage in administrative training, in the case of qualified nurses destined to fulfil more important administrative functions in either the supervision of a ward, a service, or an establishment. A complementary post-basic training is necessary to prepare the qualified nurses for the difficult and multiple tasks which are included in administrative functions on a higher level. This training should be the object of a rational study based on the examination of the nurse's responsibilities in the health services. This study must be extended over a certain length of time and the level of the teaching must attain a higher standard.

The curricula should include thorough theoretical instruction in matters relating to certain sciences—psychology, pedagogy, sociology, economics; an initiation into the methods of administration and supervision; a training in methods of research absolutely necessary for the improvement of the quality of nursing care. This theoretical teaching should be completed by more active and concrete teaching in the form of discussion and study groups.

Finally, the principles taught should be applied during a period of practical training in different types of institutions: public or private, industrial, educational, etc.

The trainee should be helped and guided during these periods of practical training, which should not be wholly restricted to the medical services but extended to include the different services they are called on to collaborate with, such as technical, administrative and annexed services whose principal elements of organization and method must be known by the administrative nurse.

This specialized training in Belgium is organized in the form of post-basic teaching given full-time during a determined period, thus greatly limiting recruitment. It could be considered in a more elastic form, dividing the length of time into a succession of stages, giving more liberty to the candidates and being more favourable to recruitment.

There is now one last stage we have to consider: the improvement of the training of personnel in hospital management.

This training consists more in an effort to adapt the personnel to changing surroundings. Its programme must be elaborated according to the needs of the health services and the time at the disposal of the nurses to whom this training applies. It can be organized in the form of lessons, conferences, training centres for weekend, weekly, or fortnightly courses, or more extensive courses of study, according to the possibilities.

This initiative can come from hospital establishments who wish to make themselves responsible for it, a specialized school, or a professional body.

In Belgium, this training is being carried out in certain institutes; we look forward to the time when it will spread and be organized throughout the whole country.

We recommend for inclusion in its programme the teaching of certain basic principles relative to the following sciences and methods: notions of psychology and pedagogy in relation to the role of sister; complementary training in social science, mental health, and public health; systematization applied to health education and training in the function of the sister; principles of administration and supervision.

Further, a more specific part of the programme must be adapted to the particular needs of the functions exercised by the participants; it could be elaborated in the form of study or discussion groups whose aim would be to give the practical demonstration of the notions taught concerning the solution of complex problems met daily in the course of duty.

Conclusion

If the training of nurses for their administrative role is shown to be necessary for the direction of the health services, it seems to us that it should be organized in each country on a rational plan, studied on the basis of the needs and the possibilities.

This training should prepare nurses to fulfil a function which implies not only technical competence but also an aptitude for administration in the widest sense of the word, namely: an awareness of the responsibilities assumed in the institution from both the professional and human angles; a sense of authority; a capacity for analysing facts, improving methods of work, and instilling knowledge in others.

Then again, if we wish this training to contribute to an improvement in social atmosphere and human relations in the hospital, it must be included in the management policy, and the working atmosphere must encourage changes correlative with attitudes in this field.

In the health services, the necessity for teamwork is now being very clearly shown; it is absolutely essential to prepare the members of the team for their task, and promote a team spirit in the work. This preparation cannot be limited to the strictly professional field; it must be extended to the general principles of social and psychological sciences, to methods of functional administration of the services. It must be considered not only for the nursing staff, but also for all categories of administrators called to participate in the management and functioning of health institutions. In effect, all administration is finally worth what the men and women in control of it are worth.

'From my Remembrance Pluck'd'

THE other day our family doctor called to see one of the children about whom I was a bit worried. He was able to assure me that there was very little wrong with the child and then, professional matters concluded, he dropped into an easy chair in the sitting-room and we chatted companionably over a cup of coffee. He had just come from a confinement and he told me that in his opinion, there was no more rewarding task in a doctor's practice than to bring a new life into the world; to hear the baby's first cries and to see the wonderful expression on the mother's face as the child was laid in her arms.

Recovery after Childbirth

Many doctors, he said, held that a woman's recovery from the great emotional and physical strain of childbirth was made in well-defined stages; the first was a mood of elation, followed on the second day by a mood of depression, after which the mother returns to normal, though conscious of her new status and responsibilities as a parent.

Having given birth to two children, I considered myself a fair authority on the subject, but I had never before heard of this 'three-phase' theory and, when the doctor had left, I found myself thinking back over my own experiences, and sorting out my personal reactions to that age-old yet ever-new miracle in an attempt to correlate my conclusions with the more scientific medical view.

Certainly on the first day there is a feeling of elation, which is undoubtedly the reason why I was able to write a long letter to my parents (who were many miles away) scarcely an hour after the delivery of each of my children. It also probably accounts for the tone of positive gaiety which they afterwards told me both these letters contained.

I found that this mood was not affected at first by any of the postnatal discomforts, chiefly because, with me at any rate, these were almost non-existent. I was tired, certainly: I had just put in a great deal of hard work! But apart from a slight soreness, pain was a thing of the past, and I was experiencing the same kind of relief you feel when you realize that you've no longer got a splitting headache! In addition, I had just accomplished the greatest miracle of nature and was feeling excessively pleased with myself. I wanted to shout it from the housetops, but that being impossible in the circumstances, I resorted to the only method then open to me of spreading the news of my cleverness; namely, letter-writing.

Reasons for Depression

Sooner or later—depending probably on the mother's particular temperament—a mood of depression does descend on one and, analysing my own feelings, I think it is due to the following reasons.

(1) You begin to realize that you are not the only very clever person around. In fact, people are being very clever almost all the time, and you ceased to be the only one the minute you left the labour ward (in the opinion, at any rate, of the medical and nursing staff and the other patients!)

(2) You've endured several months, more or less, of discomfort, ungainliness, possibly sickness, etc., etc.; you've endured several hours, more or less, of acute pain—now your figure is more like its normal self—you've got a lovely son—or daughter—you're having a nice rest in bed in a pleasant room with everyone sending you huge bouquets of flowers, telegrams, letters, presents for the baby and all the rest of it. You've never been so feted in your life and everying in the garden should be lovely. But, nature isn't being fair—you're getting after-pains which make you wonder if perhaps a twin got left behind—you're starting to collect some milk (also, I found, rather a sore business at first) and as if this isn't enough, you feel somewhat travel-stained, and you're not allowed to have a bath or even a shower. A noisy infant doesn't worry you because they hardly ever let you see the baby anyhow, in fact, you wonder if you really have got one or did you dream it all!

To those of our sex who have not yet had the wonderful experience of childbirth, this stage, I admit, sounds a bit grim, but I found —and many of my married friends agree with me—that it doesn't last more than a day at the most. When it left me, I became my normal rather placid self again, with perhaps the tiniest feeling of superiority that I didn't have before.

A Fourth Phase

It seems then that, I, at any rate, have roughly borne out the doctor's theory but I can add a fourth phase that for all I know may also have been experienced by many

CONQUERING LEPROSY

MASS campaigns against leprosy in Africa, now being assisted by WHO and UNICEF, cover an estimated two million sufferers in a total population of 60 million. The regions receiving help are French Equatorial Africa, French West Africa, Gambia, Ghana, Nigeria and Uganda.

This disease has always been regarded with dread and sufferers become social outcasts, having to bear something of the same degree of social stigma borne by mentally-ill people in this country. Yet it has been known for many years that leprosy is not hereditary and is only mildly contagious, and it is believed that most cases are the result of close contact with infected people in early childhood.

'Neutralization' is now possible in most cases with sulfone treatment, provided the disease is discovered in its early stages. By the end of this year, for instance, it is estimated that 50-60 per cent. of the 150,000 sufferers in French Equatorial Africa will have been 'neutralized'. The cure and rehabilitation of patients can then be undertaken.

There are signs that the horror of the disease is being replaced by understanding. The people of the territories where the campaigns are being conducted seem to be realizing their value. Patients who can be convinced that there is a possibility of a cure are readily submitting to treatment. Only contagious cases are being isolated in the 'leprosy villages'.

REFRESHER COURSE AT HARLOW WOOD

A ONE week's refresher course attended by 26 orthopaedic nurses and physiotherapists from various hospitals was recently held at Harlow Wood Orthopaedic Hospital. Lectures and demonstrations on treatment and rehabilitation, plastic hand surgery and acute poliomyelitis were given by the consultant surgeons, matron and other hospital staff members. The students also toured Portland Training College for the Disabled, Berry Hill Rehabilitation Centre, Stanton Ironworks and the rehabilitation centre there.

Social occasions included a reception on the first evening when the Duchess of Portland and members of the Nottingham No. 5 Hospital Management Committee and staff of the hospital received the guests; a tour of Welbeck Abbey personally conducted by the Duke and Duchess of Portland, and a dinner on the last evening when members of the Joint Examination Board of the British Orthopaedic Association and the Central Council for the Care of Cripples under whose auspices the course was arranged were among the guests.

N.A.P.T. SCHOLARSHIP AWARDED

THE nurse tutor course scholarship of £100, awarded by the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, has been awarded to Mr. John McNamara, charge nurse at Yardley Green Hospital, who will take the two-year training at Battersea Polytechnic.

The object of this scholarship is to encourage nurses working in tuberculosis to qualify as tutors and return to help train nurses in tuberculosis hospitals.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE HOSPITAL

THE subscribers of Florence Nightingale Hospital, London, N.W.1, held their annual general meeting at the Mansion House this year. This famous little hospital, where Florence Nightingale first had the opportunity to prove her brilliant administrative ability, continues to provide private and semi-private treatment for professiona women of limited means and is one of the very few which retains complete independence from State control and relies entirely on voluntary financial support.

Slightly fewer patients have been admitted but the average stay is longer. There has been much renovation during the year, including £650 spent on refurnishing the nurses bedrooms.

NEW PHYSIOTHERAPY DEPARTMENT, HACKNEY

A NEW physiotherapy department converted from two wards was opened at Hackney Hospital by Major the Hon. Arthur Villiers on May 17. The department was designed to meet the increased needs of the hospital and work was started in July 1956.

There are consulting and examination rooms, changing-rooms for staff and patients, facilities for ultra-violet light treatment, wax baths, hydrotherapy and for the treatment of open wounds. An electric horse has been presented to the department by Maj. Villiers. Comparison between the numbers of patients treated in 1949 and in 1956 shows that the figure has almost doubled. The total cost of the scheme was about £14,750.

The author demonstrates the backhand: getting into position for the stroke.

Taking the ball—note the position of feet and also the angle of the racket.

The follow-through, completing the 'oval' swing of a correct backhand drive.

Joy Mottram, Tennis Professional and former Wimbledon player, is writing this practical series to help you—

Improve your Tennis this Season

2.—PUTTING POWER INTO THE BACKHAND DRIVE

THE backhand drive is nearly always the stumbling block with beginners. They feel the stroke is unnatural and they often lack power on this swing in comparison with their forehand drive. Yet once the player masters the footwork of the stroke which allows her to turn the shoulders and swing at the ball, power soon develops and with it confidence grows.

The Correct Grip

Do make sure you are using a correct grip, as nothing will hold your drive back more than the use of a poor grip. Start off by holding the racket with the Eastern "shake-hands" grip that we saw last week for the forehand drive. Now without moving your hand, loosen your fingers slightly and turn the racket almost a quarter of a turn in a clockwise direction. Place your thumb across the handle and spread your forefinger just as in the forehand grip. If you keep your wrist absolutely firm as you swing the racket, this grip allows you to hit a flat or slightly topspinning drive. I try to keep my wrist locked right through to the finish of the stroke.

Most backhand drive troubles start with bad footwork which puts the player's shoulders facing the net. You must be sideways to the ball and to get into this position your right foot (if you are right handed) should be well in front of your left at the moment of hitting. This gets the shoulders well round and out of the way of the arm as it swings the racket.

You will control the swing of the racket more easily if you keep your left hand on the "throat" of the racket during the backswing.

Just as in the forehand drive, I recommend you to make a smooth oval-shaped swing of the racket. Start by taking the racket slightly upwards as it goes back. It next moves downwards to form the loop and then completes the "oval" by moving forwards and up on the ball, lifting it over the net. Whatever you do don't let your wrist go slack and allow the head of the racket to slide under the ball—a common error with beginners.

'Knees Bend'

It is also most important to bend your knees to the low balls—all good players do this. You cannot overdo the 'knees bend', and here's another point to remember—stay down when you bend and don't straighten up until after the follow-through has been completed. It will help you to stay down when you hit the ball if you watch it carefully right on to the racket. Frequent mistiming and hitting the ball on the wood is usually caused by not watching the ball with sufficient care. Hit the ball when it is opposite the right shoulder.

Try to develop rhythm with your backhand drive, taking the racket back early as you move into position. This early preparation allows you to make an unhurried stroke—one of the secrets of success in lawn tennis.

The Art of 'Saying a Few Words'

Practise listening to the sound of your own voice.

By MARJORIE HELLIER, L.G.S.M.

How to make yourself Heard and Felt is the theme of the concluding article in this Series for Beginners in Public Speaking

THE art of 'saying a few words' can be boiled down to two essentials—having something to say, and saying it clearly.

This clearness applies not only to the expressing of our ideas, but to the actual utterance of them. The brightest remarks are wasted unless they are audible. How can we be certain that our voice will carry to a reasonably large audience?

It is done partly by thought, partly by breath, and partly by sheer muscular energy. Speak your words well forward in the mouth, and direct them, mentally, across the audience to the wall opposite. Imagine that your listeners are slightly deaf!

Don't hang your head over your notes; your voice will drop at your feet!

But thinking alone won't carry your voice—it must have the support of breath. Textbooks proclaim that we need bigger breaths to speak in public, but big breaths are of little use unless we know how to control them. It is quite possible to have more breath than we know what to do with! The amount of air you take in is less important than where you take it and when. Contrary to the general impression, it doesn't matter much how often you breathe, provided you breathe in the right place—both physically and verbally.

Instead of using your throat to suck the breath sharply into the top of the chest, simply expand your lower ribs—and air will enter of its own accord. The lungs are larger towards the base, so make your breath deeper and it will automatically be fuller. Again, instead of spreading your breath over long hurried sentences—grabbing at a new one only when you are in dire need of it—use shorter sentences (they are easier to speak and easier to follow) and breathe between each whether you feel you need it or not. Speak with vigour and emphasis and you will need it; you'll find yourself using the extra air for extra voice.

Put Energy Into It

But carrying tones do not necessarily depend on loudness. Put more energy into the actual forming of the sounds, and they will be heard even when you speak scarcely above a whisper. Open and close your lips more crisply, shape them more definitely, tap and flick the tongue more cleanly, especially at the end of words, and more especially at the end of the last word of each sentence; this is too often lost while we are mentally groping for the first few words of the next sentence.

Don't be afraid to pause while you grope. The audience need time to think as well as you—why spoil it for them by a pointless er?

We speak of people being "frightened at the sound of their own voice". The nervous speech-maker frequently is, especially if he has never heard himself in public before. We are not in the habit of listening to our own voice in everyday converse and when, suddenly—perched on a platform—we unexpectedly become aware of it, simply because everyone else's voice is silent, the experience unnerves us—if it doesn't render us speechless!

There is a common-sense remedy: practise listening to your voice. Be conscious of what it sounds like in casual talk—and make your talk less casual; be slower and clearer—more animated, if you tend to monotony. This is bound to make you a little self-conscious, of course, but you must be prepared to suffer for your art! It will probably limit your conversation, too (and that might not be such a bad thing. . . .)

Get used to hearing the sound of your Public Voice. At lectures, make yourself ask a question afterwards; at club meetings, don't hang back when members are asked to make some verbal contribution to the proceedings; in committee, don't just sit dumb; make a constructive remark, if only to say, "That's a good idea" (unless it isn't; then say so, but also say why, and suggest an alternative.)

Two other things affect the carrying-power of your voice. The way you hold yourself, and the way you hold your notes. When you rise to speak, take your time about it; don't leap up with a jerk and blurt out your first sentence before your audience even realize that you have started. Rise calmly—without the help of the table—plant your feet firmly, hold your head erect, smile, breathe, then start. . . .

If you hang your head over your notes your voice will drop down at your own feet, instead of at the feet of the people at the back. Your breath needs a straight run up the windpipe if it is to give proper support to your voice, and your voice needs a straight journey out to your audience. So hold your notes where you can see them with an occasional downward glance of the eyes—not a continual downward jerk of the head; this can be madly distracting to watch.

Have your notes on small, thick sheets of paper, rather than large thin ones (to minimise vibration!) written neatly, but not so neat and small that you can't read what's there. One postcard is best; the more notes you have, the more you will be tempted to refer to them, even though you know every word that's written there. They act as a magnet.

Your notes should be in the form of headings only; not complete sentences, but merely 'clues' (perhaps cryptic ones to anybody but yourself) reminding you of what you mean to say on various aspects of your subject. You can extract these headings from the written draft of your speech, and you should try to keep them as small in number as possible.

Look them in the Face

Remember you will never hold your audience just by standing up and speaking in front of them—you have to speak to them, and that means looking at them, however shy you are at first. Gradually you will get used to those rows of faces—after all, as I said earlier, you have only been asked to talk, and what, honestly, is so very alarming in that? Probably, as a beginner at the job, you have been asked to talk to friends, so try to approach the whole affair in a friendly, fearless state of mind. Be definite, be natural, above all be sincere, and your audience will overlook the small faults that they know very well they would probably have themselves.

Finally—with all these points in mind—say "yes" to every invitation to speak that comes your way, and maybe you will one day know the thrilling experience of holding an audience spell-bound.

Dumfries and Galloway Branch

Members and friends of Dumfries and Galloway Branch spent a most interesting and enjoyable afternoon on June 8 when they visited the Civil Aviation Radio Station at Warlockhead. Technical staff showed the party over the station and explained the work, and Miss E. E. Graham, Branch chairman, thanked the staff for their kindness. The day was fine and members admired the wonderful panorama of the surrounding countryside.

Stratford-on-Avon Branch

Stratford-on-Avon Branch organized an open lecture on June 18. To invite teachers, local councillors, social workers from various departments, doctors and citizens interested in public work, was something of an experiment in unification—and it succeeded. Dr. L. G. Housden, O.B.E., author of The Prevention of Cruelty to Children and late adviser in parentcraft to the Ministry of Health, came from Nottingham to speak on 'The Prevention of Problem Families'. Dr. S. W. Savage, county medical officer of health, was in the chair and Dr. J. B. Bramwell, area medical officer, was on the platform. Miss Sawyer, matron of Stratford General Hospital, allowed the use of the nurses' extremely pleasant recreation room and organized the welcome cup of tea, cakes and sandwiches at the end of the lecture.

The room was packed; about 100 people came from neighbouring Branches and as far away as Sutton Coldfield and Coleshill as well as from Evesham and Birmingham. Dr. Housden handled his subject warmly and with humanity and seemed to bring his diverse audience together. The discussion was lively and could have continued twice as long.

REVISED SALARIES

The negotiating committee of the Staff Side of the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council met the Management Side on Monday, June 24, to continue negotiations for revised salaries for nurses and midwives. Discussion took place upon the general principle on which revision should be based but it was not found possible to reach a decision. The negotiating Committee, after consultation with the full Staff Side, will meet the Management Side again on July 9.

Letters to the Editor

Registration in another Country

MADAM.—The Board of the South African Nursing Association has been most distressed to find that many nurses from the United Kingdom arrive in South Africa before they have ascertained whether they qualify for registration there. Many of the nurses think that all they have to do is to produce evidence of their registration with the General Nursing Council for England and Wales and that they will immediately be admitted to the Register.

My Board would appreciate it if a notice could be published in your journal drawing the attention of nurses to the necessity for applying for registration to the Registrar, South African Nursing Council, P.O. Box 1123, Pretoria, immediately they contemplate coming to South Africa to work. Before leaving the United Kingdom they should be in possession of either their registration certificate or a letter confirming that they will be admitted to the Register on arrival in South Africa.

Your assistance in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

DOREEN H. RADLOFF,
Organizing Secretary,
The South African Nursing Association.

[Not only should similar application be made by any nurse from Great Britain intending to work in another country or state, but she should see that she is a member of an organization which is in membership with the National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. She can then seek the facilities and assistance available through her National Council and the national association of the country to which she wishes to go.—EDITOR.]

For the past 14 years Miss Keegan has been in the Ministry of Labour and National Service—for three years as technical nursing officer, Preston Nursing Appointments Office, three years as deputy principal nursing officer at the Ministry, and for the remaining period as senior technical nursing officer at the London and South Eastern Regional Office of the Ministry.

MISS K. R. JARDINE, who receives the M.B.E., took her general training at Perth Hospital, Western Australia, afterwards going to Sydney for further study and experience in obstetrics and gynaecology. She worked for a time at a Truby King children's clinic and after a holiday in Durban, served at various hospitals in Johannesburg, Rhodesia and Kenya. Miss Jardine joined the Colonial nursing service and eventually became matron of King George VI Hospital, Nairobi, until she retired in 1949. During the Mau-Mau unrest she was, however, urged to return to nursing; this she did and is now in charge of the District Training Hospital in Kilifi, Coast Province, East Africa.

Among nurses to receive the M.B.E. is MISS M. B. CAHILL, of Queen Elizabeth's Overseas Nursing Service, senior matron, Federal Medical Department, Nigeria. Miss Cahill took general training at the National Temperance Hospital, London, and midwifery at the Rotunda Hospital, Dublin, where she remained on the staff for 18 months. After a year's nursing experience in France, she joined the Overseas Nursing Service in Northern Rhodesia where she was principally engaged in child welfare work. Later she had charge of an African hospital. In 1950 she was seconded to the Seychelles Nursing Service and her work there included the training of local nurses (general and midwifery), and organizing hospitals and clinics in the outlying islands. In 1954 Miss Cahill transferred to Nigeria and was promoted to senior matron, Lagos, in 1956, when she assumed charge of the General Hospital at Lagos. This is the largest training school for Nigerian registered nurses and at present there are 104 students in training.

MISS VERA STOVES, S.R.N., R.F.N., S.C.M., H.V.CERT., IND.N.CERT., who is awarded the M.B.E., is senior nursing sister at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough, Ministry of Supply. Miss Stoves trained at the Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle upon Tyne, West Lane Fever Hospital, Middlesbrough, and York Maternity Hospital, Acomb, York. She took her health visitor course under the Durham County Council, and has held various occupational health posts under the Ministry of Supply, including that of senior sister, Atomic Energy Establishment, Capenhurst. She is a former member of the Central Sectional Committee of the Occupational Health Section, Royal College of Nursing.

SQUADRON OFFICER J. M. HIGGINS, A.R.R.C., P.M.R.A.F.N.S., who receives the R.R.C., trained at The London Hospital and afterwards at Queen Charlotte's Hospital, remaining on the private staff of the latter for two further years. In 1939 she joined Princess Mary's Royal Air Force Nursing Service, and has recently returned from Aden—her third tour of overseas duty.

MISS ANNIE CALEY, senior assistant psychiatric sister at The Pastures mental hospital, Mickleover, Derbyshire, has been awarded the M.B.E. A nurse for 33 years, Miss Caley has spent 25 of them consecutively at The Pastures. Devoted to progress in the treatment of mental illness she is keen on wider publicity to attract young women into mental nursing.

Another Derbyshire nurse mentioned in the honours list was MISS ALICE TUCKER who has been a nurse at Aston Hall Hospital, Aston-on-Trent, since it was opened in 1925. Her service has already been recognized on at least two occasions by the hospital management committee, and now she receives the B.E.M.

From milk to mixed diet

HOW HEINZ STRAINED FOODS HELP

Mothers of 3 or 4-month-old babies often need your practical advice about how to start baby on a mixed diet.

When you suggest Heinz Strained Foods you can do so with complete confidence. The 19 different foods, introduced gradually from about 3-months onwards, between them offer scope for a varied diet. They are cooked and strained under strictly controlled conditions, with the minimum loss of food values. And, of course, they are prepared much more hygienically than they would be in an ordinary kitchen.

For full details of the nutrient values of the 19 varieties of Heinz Strained Foods, write to Dept. T8, H. J. Heinz Co. Ltd., Harlesden, London N.W.10.

Codis is so much better...

...when a codeine compound tablet is necessary because all the advantages of "Disprin", which you know so well, have been embodied in the "Codis" tablet. The aspirin in Codis is in the form of soluble aspirin as in Disprin. This means that there is far less likelihood of stomach upset. The tablet disperses promptly in water, making it easier to administer, and prompt relief is ensured.

Codis is recommended for all those conditions in which a codeine compound tablet is indicated.

Codis is a compound tablet containing soluble aspirin with codeine and phenacetin
